Garneau on the block

by Kevin X. WILSON

Alberta's seventh-largest community is running out of room.

Nestled near Edmonton's geographic centre, the University of Alberta finds itself hemmed in by the city that has grown up around it.

Over the next 10 years, the university's administration expects its student population to grow by two percent annually — a total increase of 6,700 students by 2010. Those students will need classrooms and accommodations and parking. More research space will be needed, too. Overall, the institution reckons that it will need 200,000 more square metres of floor space before 2005, with an additional 200,000 square metres required before 2010.

The university's response to this looming space crisis has been to table a trio of potential schemes as possible Long Range Development Plans. All emphasize development on lands already owned by the U of A, but one, according to a city councillor, would mean "essentially wiping out North Garneau."

But what if there were an alternative — one that had the potential to save the city and the university money — one that could simultaneously revitalize the heart of the city and protect one of its oldest neighborhoods?

THE PLANS

Regardless of which plan is adopted, the university intends to create a "south campus," which would be built on existing U of A holdings. The northern portions of the university Farm would be used for some combination The "West 240," currently an open field located between the Grandview Heights and the Landsdowne neighbourhoods, would be used for joint ventures with "university partners." University representatives are reluctant to narrow the ranges of activities those ventures might include or the structures they might require.

While the proposals for the south campus have the potential to affect neighbouring residential areas, all three of the development options involve lands already held by the university.

It is in Garneau — one of the city's mature neighbourhoods — that university development option two calls for the acquisition of several blocks of property, including those on which Garneau School and the Garneau Theatre now stand. In the case of the latter, the plan recommends demolishing it to make way for a four- to five- story parking garage.

DOWNTOWN CALLING

Terry Kilburn wants the university to think again.

The partner in commercial real estate firm Avison Young has nothing against the institution. In fact, he's something of a booster. "I'm looking at the university as being a driving force in Edmonton for the foreseeable future," he says. "If their vision unfolds the way they see it unfolding, they'll be the driving force in this town."

Moreover, although he recognizes the concerns of university-area residents, he's not opposed to the university's moving into established residential areas. "Sure they want to expand eastward into Garneau. I don't blame them for that. They're going to take all the land they can in there."

But, he says, Garneau won't be able to handle all the growth. "And I don't think necessarily that the south campus is where they should be going," he says. Later, he adds, "Other than [the fact that it owns] the land, I don't know what the hell that does for the university." The university has it backwards, Kilburn says. The school shouldn't be heading south but north, to Edmonton's downtown.

It's a course of action that would save us all money, according to Kilburn. "I'd rather see them coming across the existing infrastructure — the LRT — rather than building more LRT that I don't think we need in this city," he says, adding that Phoenix has no rail system despite being three times larger than Edmonton. "[City council is] talking about three-quarters of a billion dollars to go down to Heritage Mall. By the time they get down there it'll be a billion dollars."

Crossing the river also means that the university can enjoy a cost-effective solution to its most pressing problem — space. Kilburn notes the predicted need for four million square feet — or 40 per cent growth — over the next 10 years. "Their growth curve is pretty dramatic," he says. "I just know where there's a lot of cheap space — and that's in downtown Edmonton."

Kilburn also knows where to find a lot of that cheap space in one place. The all-but-abandoned Bay building on Jasper Avenue has enjoyed just one tenant — A-Channel — for some time. "The Bay is just sitting there," says Kilburn, "and yeah, it has to be converted, but I think that can be done pretty nicely at about half the cost of having to build a new building."

THE U OF A is considering a plan to expand west to 109 Street in Garneau. If the plan were to go through, it would include the demolition of such landmarks as the Garneau Theatre, which would be replaced with a parkade (see bottom right-hand corner of map). Because of provincial law, there's nothing city hall can do to stop it.

The Bay building offers 400,000 square feet of space. Kilburn says that could be increased by building on top of the existing structure. But even without additional construction, the building would account for 20 per cent of the university's projected need over the next 10 years.

In addition to lower costs for transportation and office space, Kilburn sees a mutually beneficial relationship developing between Edmonton's downtown and the U of A. "I'd like to see the university get a little more involved in the downtown and in the business community. I think it would be very healthy for the university to integrate themselves more into the community," if for no other reason, he says, than "because a lot of their money is going to be coming from the private sector."

He also thinks that it would be good for the business community to learn a little bit more about the university.

Costs and synergies aside, having the university downtown could go a long way to reviving Edmonton's moribund downtown, says Kilburn. "So goes your downtown, so goes your city. Edmonton has been very poorly perceived over the last 15 years, in other cities." That's one of the reasons why he's after the university and the province to make a commitment to the area.

Asked if there are other buildings that might lend themselves to university use, Kilburn says that none approaches the square footage. The empty federal building perhaps? Its construction (he calls the building "a rabbit hutch") makes renovation prohibitively expensive, he says. Nevertheless, "I think if [the university] came downtown in a major way, other smaller opportunities would come along that they could look at."

Kilburn acknowledges that the campus would have to operate on the opposite side of the river, but he doesn't consider that a strong argument against a move. "There are a number of multi-campus universities all over North America that operate just fine. So what I'm saying is, while you can, someone ought to be taking advantage of being able to create large amounts of space. They're not on campus: they're close. They're hooked in by the LRT. There's a lot of money to be saved by doing this. I can't think of too many downsides except that somebody has to take the plunge and get used to it. They've got think outside the box a little bit."

A CIVIC RESOURCE

Like Terry Kilburn, Ward Four Councillor Michael Phair has problems with the tack the university is taking.

"I'm not too fond of most of what has been proposed to this point," he says, in response to the university's preferred development options. Like Kilburn, he's uncomfortable with the south campus proposals, but the affected lands are outside his ward. Not so the Garneau neighbourhood. "In terms of what is being proposed for the current, major campus along the river, I have a number of concerns."

The causes of Phair's dissatisfaction differ, sometimes markedly, from Kilburn's. He worries about how transportation will be affected by increasing population density in Garneau. Phair's other principal concern has to do with neighbourhood development, and one of the university's proposed options particularly worries him because it would mean, in his opinion, the end of a community.

"Of the plans that they have, I probably have the most serious concerns about [development option two] because it's essentially wiping out the North Garneau community, including a number of significant buildings — including the High Level Diner and the Sugarbowl and the Garneau Theatre and the Garneau School, which are not only landmarks and well known but also used by many people from around the city."

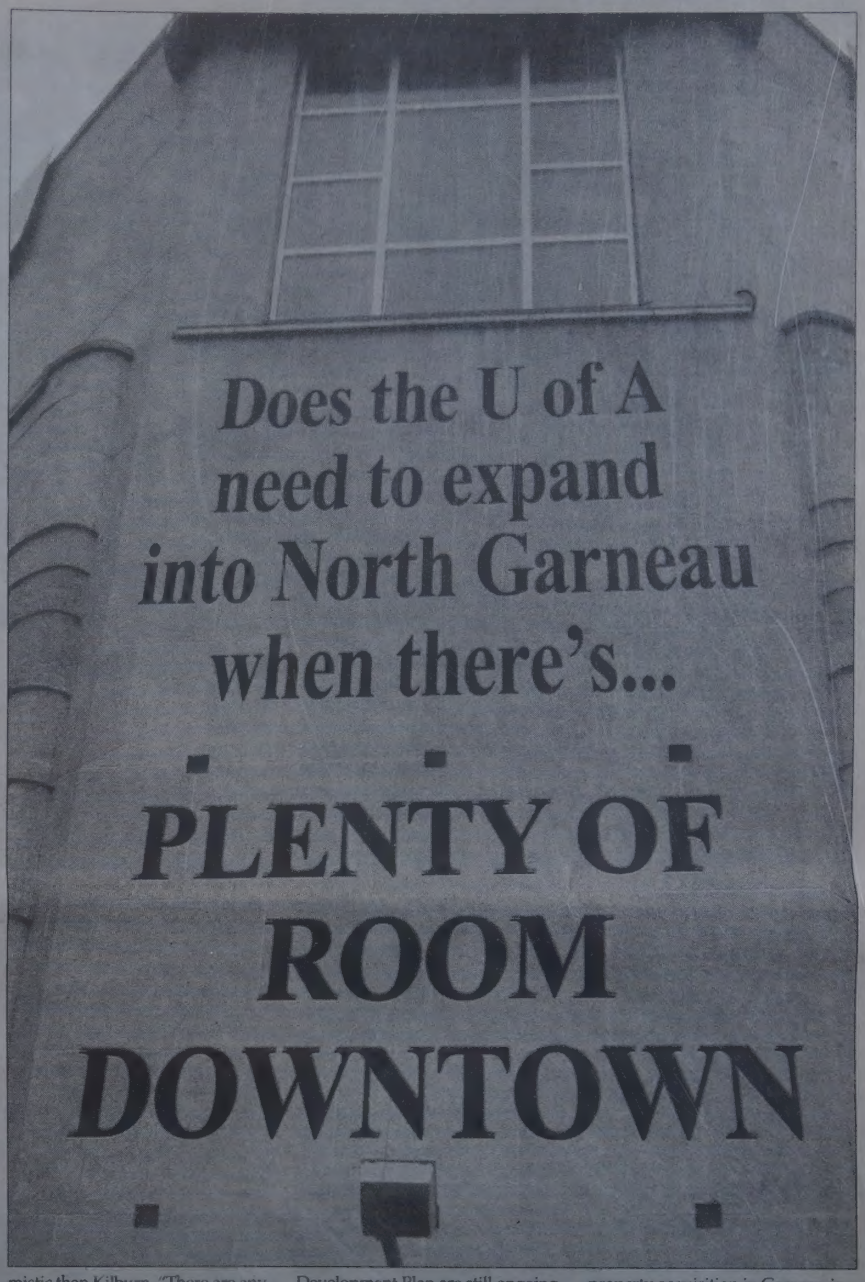
The councillor is also troubled by the U of A's disinclination to consult with the municipal government. "I think there needs to be a great deal of major discussion with the city and with the community before any of these ideas go further. To the the best of my knowledge, the proposed plans have been unveiled and they have not been reviewed by the city. Nor has the city been a part of any of this, other than providing some background information."

He acknowledges that, according to the provincial Universities Act, the U of A isn't obligated to consult with the city on development issues. "Technically it doesn't but — boy — it's sure going to impact on all of those roads and transportation systems and everything else that comes out around that area. It's foolish to not have the city be a part of that."

Phair's ward also includes parts of downtown. He thinks the area would be a nice fit for the university. "I think the notion of expanding into the downtown is very viable and they should consider that. With the connection with the LRT which exists, it would be quite convenient and in my opinion quite easy for both the staff who work in the university, and students, to do that."

With regard to finding space, Phair is considerably more optimistic than Kilburn. "There are any number of buildings that are office buildings that are partially or almost completely empty that are in very close location to the LRT. Certainly in the government area just north of the legislature there's any number of buildings in there that would work well and would not, in my opinion, be particularly difficult to obtain." He adds that the same is true in other downtown areas.

Moreover, says Phair, the university, which has already invested in apartment buildings near the campus, could be looking downtown for buildings that could serve as residences. In fact, such a move would fit nicely with the city's objectives. "We have been encouraging additional redevelopment of properties downtown for housing. We would certainly welcome additional downtown housing."



LOOKING AHEAD

The University of Alberta is urging its neighbours not to panic. Discussions about the Long Range Development Plan are still ongoing. Still, the season for discussion is short. The university plans to hold an open house in November to present the results of feedback it has received, to be followed by more consultation. And another open house. The university's board of governors is slated to makes its final decision in April 2002.

The Universities Act allows for the U of A to expropriate privately held land as it deems necessary. Current and former Garneau residents still remember with anger the era during the '60s and '70s when many homeowners were forced to make deals with the university. Other residents fear that the university will simply buy properties as they become available and let them fall into disrepair.

On the subject of expropriation, the university's Long Range Development Plan FAQ says that "The scenario presented is not based on an assumption that land will be expropriated." That's not the same as "No property will be expropriated," mind you. And if property acquisition in Garneau is chosen as the preferred scenario but land isn't expropriated, how will the university be able to acquire that land in the required time frame?

The FAQ answers, "The university does not have a plan, as the option to develop in Garneau is still only a possible requirement rather than a demonstrated need. We have heard a wide variety of opinions from Garneau residents on what they feel is an appropriate approach if expansion becomes the best option. Private developers have also expressed interest in purchasing property in the area."

As far as the issue of consultation with the city is concerned, the matter is slightly clearer: the board of governors will make the final decision. "Decisions about the LRT and other major capital projects involve many other stakeholders such as the City of Edmonton .... "

Although both residents and council are "involved" in the discussion, there are no guarantees that they will find the results satisfying.

Editor, SEE:
Of all the coverage I got during this election I must say I was most surprised with what was said in SEE Magazine. While observing that the top three candidates were as interchangeable as I witnessed them to be, SEE failed to think outside the box and provide a substantial amount of information about Edmonton's other mayoralty candidates, myself included.

I was never approached for an interview; Andrew Hanon called my house a day before the article was due, on a day I happened to be very busy, and so I never had a chance to speak to him. Without actually reaching me for comment or giving me any type of interview, how dare SEE imply that I didn't take my campaign seriously? Just because I didn't intend to win, didn't mean I ran without any motivation or any task.

My job was to show that democracy in Edmonton is inequitable, and to provide a voice of dissent in the forums. I didn't bore the audience or my fellow candidates by reading the same speech at every forum, and the points I raised about Mayor Smith and the City of Edmonton were absolutely valid. If you don't believe me, ask your corporate counterparts and my fellow candidates, who showed up at every forum with high expectations of me, and who it seems understood my intentions better than SEE. If independent news didn't see a point in covering the other six candidates as equally, then I ask, what are you here for?

Support Noce?? Who won his city council seat through an explicitly homophobic campaign against contender Sherri McKibbon? Who not only supported developers through the long and torturous Riverdale brickyard debate but actually interrupted and ridiculed speakers from the community? Who continually contradicts himself on social issues? Who has articulated NO economic strategies despite his claim to be fiscally responsible?

And you — the only publication leaning towards anything that can be called alternative — think Noce is admirable because he can do the fire and brimstone thing?

Yes, of course he has a higher IQ than Smith. So does a carrot, for God's sake. And yes, of course Noce is using City Hall as a stepping stone to a career in Ottawa. We don't need another right-wing homophobe in Ottawa. Really, we don't.

Why, why, why didn't you support one of the intelligent, progressive candidates who seem to give a damn about something other than their own careers?

Devaney and Elsworthy won't win this time or even next time but you've cited several reasons for supporting them.

Why didn't you?

SEE•POV
Old mayor, new council

First, the bad news: Bill Smith is our mayor for another three years.

Now, the good news: It's not going to matter as much.

While Canada's political equivalent to Teddy Ruxpin will continue to be CEO of the City of Edmonton, we are fortunate that his is only one vote among 13 on city council. And there's a very strong chance that Smith's vote will count for a lot less in the coming term.

Prior to the election, a loose coalition of social progressives was forming on council. It began taking clear shape during the campaign when Allan Bolstad, Michael Phair, Dave Thiele and Bryan Anderson made a few presentations together. But now the Four Horsemen have several more progressives joining them at the table: former Liberal MLAs Karen Leibovici and Ed Gibbons, along with former school trustee Janice Melnychuk. If the likes of Phair and Anderson are the coalition builders they appear to be, it won't be long before the new three are working with the Horsemen.

Meanwhile, the pro-developer faction that Smith most often aligned himself with has lost some of its toughest stalwarts, notably Leroy Chahley and Rose Rosenberger. Three of the 12 newcomers — Jane Batty, Stephen Mandel and Ron Hayter — campaigned on a pro-business platform, but even if they, Terry Cavanagh and Larry Langley side with Smith on every vote, that would still give the progressives a 7-6 majority.

It would be naive to suggest that every single decision will go this way — this isn't a two-party system, after all — but what it will mean is that developers won't necessarily get carte blanche and their agents on council will be forced to work closely with the progressives.

Smith alluded to this in his victory speech on Monday night, when he suggested the voters will see a "different mayor" this time around. He knows that he's going to have to take his job a lot more seriously if he wants to get anything done at all. Looks like Bill Smith just might have to start caring what you think, after all.

While the gettin's good
Harris bailed before the other shoe dropped

For almost a year, I carried Premier Mike Harris's $200 tax cut in my wallet. Its edges frayed and the ink began to smudge. I looked at it from time to time, then put it away.

Refuse to cash it — what does that prove? The money had already been taken out of public accounting. It's not like my uncashed cheque was going to go to a high school teacher's salary or to a homeless shelter. Many people, confronting this dilemma, gave their tax cuts to charity, trying to plug some of the gaping holes in the social fabric left by Mr. Harris's cuts.

But I decided to be more proactive: I gave the money to the Ontario Coalition Against Poverty (OCAP), the most committed Harris-haters this province has to offer. So there was a certain poetic justice to yesterday's news: a militant anti-Harris demonstration, organized by OCAP, turned into a street celebration of Mr. Harris's resignation. Victories are rare these days — they must be savoured.

I know, I know: Mike Harris wasn't forced out, certainly not by OCAP. He chose to spend more time with his family. And yet there is no denying that he leaves at precisely the moment when his political career is on trial. It's more than the sinking polls. It's more than the mounting evidence of his involvement in the police shooting of Dudley George at Ipperwash Provincial Park. And it's more than the embarrassment of having to testify about whether his government's policies contributed to the deaths in Walkerton.

What is increasingly on trial is the blind faith that underpinned the Common Sense Revolution. With health scares spreading, borders closing, and a U.S. recession deepening, what looked like common sense now looks plain reckless.

Mike Harris came to power not with a platform so much as a doctrine, a hermetically sealed belief system about how economies work. He believed that he could make Ontario a Club Med-style dream vacation for foreign investors: handing out tax cuts, gutting labour laws, eroding rent control, golf courses downtown. Some regulations were dismantled; some ministries were simply cut back so dramatically that regulators could no longer do their jobs. To Harris, it was common sense that the public sphere was inefficient and bad for business, so school boards, hospitals and municipalities were slashed and merged as if they were private companies and he was a godlike management consultant.

He did this because he believed that what was good for investors would be good for everyone — eventually. So religiously did Mr. Harris pursue his agenda, that he came to see evidence that it wasn't working as an unwelcome interruption. His casualties were quickly reconstituted as security issues — panhandling or squeegee problems to be cleaned up with tough new legislation — breeding precisely the kind of angry militancy we saw at yesterday's OCAP demo.

The new face of McCarthyism

Letters

Editor, SEE:

Well, the slope is getting more and more slippery by the minute. With the United States passing legislation so draconian that Hitler would be proud, and other countries like Canada following suit, I am becoming afraid.

The destruction of the WTC on Sept. 11 set a whole series of events in motion, not the least of which is the trampling of the U.S. Constitution. With the formation of the new Department of Homeland Defense (i.e.. Gestapo) and the U.S. led coalition fighting a war against "terrorism" the only thing left out is the fact this is not about terrorism, it is about controlling the populace.

Some of the things the PATRIOT Act (HR 2975) allows the U.S. government to do that they have never been able to do before.

■ Authorizes "sneak and peek searches": Authorizes expanded use of covert searches for any criminal investigation, thus allowing the government to enter your home, office or other private place and conduct a search, take photographs, and download your computer files without notifying you until later.

■ Creates new crime of domestic terrorism: Creates an entirely new type of crime. By expanding the definition of terrorism in such a way, the bill could potentially allow the government to levy heavy penalties for relatively minor offenses, including political protests.

■ Allows the CIA to spy on Americans: Gives the Director of Central Intelligence the power to manage the gathering of intelligence in America and mandate the disclosure of information obtained by the FBI about terrorism in general — even if it is about law abiding American citizens — to the CIA.

■ Imposes indefinite detention: Permits authorities to indefinitely detain non-citizens, without meaningful judicial review.

■ Reduces privacy in student records: Allows law enforcement to access, use and disseminate highly personal information about American and foreign students.

■ Expands wiretap authority: Minimizes judicial supervision of law enforcement wiretap authority in several ways, including: permitting law enforcement to obtain the equivalent of "blank" warrants in the physical world; authorizing intelligence wiretaps that need not specify the phone to be tapped or require that only the target's conversations be eavesdropped upon; and allowing the FBI to use its "intelligence" authority to circumvent the judicial review of the probable cause requirement of the Fourth Amendment.

Think McCarthyism, only change the word Communist to Terrorist.

Does this send a chill down your spine? It does mine. With Canada putting the same kind of bill before Parliament, and with the U.S. stance of "if you are not with us you are with the terrorists," the federal government may feel it has to have a strongly worded law to keep us on the States' good side.

Not that this kind of action is anything new. CSIS and the RCMP have been keeping files on dissidents for decades, and governments all over the world have been doing some of this for some time, only now they would have the opportunity to do it openly against their own citizens.

Would I be labeled a terrorist for writing this letter? Could freedom of speech be the next victim in this "war on terrorism"?

I think Trudeau's philosophy of the government having no business in the bedrooms of this nation isn't such a bad idea. What would Pierre say now?

Like all fanatics, Mr. Harris was so in love with his belief that he treated his constituents as distractions. Tuning out these "special interests" — teachers, nurses, students — was a testament to his faith. No wonder the only consensus about him is that he kept his promises.

The question, as Mr. Harris departs, is: Was he right? Ontario under Harris was good for investors, but was it good for everyone?

During the economic boom, and before Sept. 11, the answer very much depended on your perspective. Many enjoyed tremendous wealth, there were signs of growth all around. The crumbling infrastructure, the over-stressed health care, the uncollected garbage, the people on the streets, seemed, to many, to be a price worth paying for prosperity. The Globe's John Ibbitson says it is "foolish and unfair" to dwell on Mr. Harris's messy recent past, that we should instead concentrate on happier times for the departing premier. But now is precisely the time to measure the Harris legacy. Our crumbling public infrastructure seems much more menacing with fears of bioterrorism all around. Our emergency rooms can't handle flu season — can they handle the worst case scenario?

In other words, if we've just been through the best of times, what's in store for the worst? When the economy was soaring, it was only the people who fell through the cracks who found out that the safety net really was gone.In the coming months, many more may find out exactly what Mr. Harris has traded away to make Ontario such a relaxing place for doing business.

Mike Harris isn't sticking around to find out if his policies are about to send this province into a true crisis. I'm sure, to him, that seems like common sense.

Gay publication pillories Phair

When Michael Phair was re-elected to his fourth term on Edmonton City Council, he did it without the help of the city's gay publication. In fact, in the October edition of Times .10, managing editor Dennis Cambly pointedly urged his readers to vote Phair out of office and replace him with pro-business city councillors.

Phair is an icon in Edmonton's tightly knit gay and lesbian community, a respected community leader, but his popularity extends well beyond: he's immensely popular in nearly all segments of the wildly disparate Ward 4. Phair was returned to office on Monday by more than 16,000 voters, nearly double that of second-place finisher Jane Batty. Even with 18 candidates running for the two ward seats, Phair was able to corner 29.3 per cent of the total votes cast.

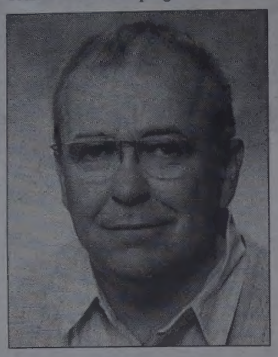
That he was able to do that with another prominent member of a vital constituency working against him makes Phair's victory even more profound. In a column which appears on Times .10's Web site, Cambly accused Phair supporters of threatening his business if the magazine didn't support their candidate.

"I was told that if Times .10 did not support Michael Phair, there would be 'ramifications' and that advertisers and supporters would be encouraged to pull out. At the same time I was also told that my personal business would suffer the 'consequences' if support were not shown for him," Cambly wrote.

Phair told SEE Magazine that he has no idea what Cambly was talking about. "I don't know anything about that," he said.

Cambly urged his readers to dump Phair, whom he considers a socialist fossil, in favour of business candidates Jeff Campbell and David Starko (who finished seventh and fourth, respectively). "We can only grow when we rid ourselves of socialists, who intrude on our freedoms and our right to hold a job without fear of city councillors closing our business."

Phair was also the object of an online attack campaign. A Web site had been set up, urging voters to reject him for his support of "anti-business" initiatives, particularly the smoking bylaw, which forbids restaurants that admit children to allow smoking.



Phair: still popular

While clearly there's no love lost between Phair and Cambly, the pair have worked together on issues in the past. Most notable was the "get out and vote" campaign during last year's federal election. They were both part of a committee that targeted gay voters and urged them to vote against the Alliance.

"I can work with him," Cambly, a federal Liberal, explained, "but there's no room in my heart for New Democrats."

To suggest that Phair has the undivided loyalty of the entire gay and lesbian community, Cambly explained, is preposterous. It's as politically diverse as any other segment of society. He claimed he has received about 300 positive responses to his column, compared to a single e-mail taking issue with it.

For his part, Phair was reluctant to talk.

News IN BRIEF

Not giving up on peace

It would be easy to assume that everyone has given up. There's a resignation among many media commentators. We're on the verge of the Third World War. If the end of the world doesn't come through missiles or tanks, it will arrive in the mail. Just you wait.

But there are those who aren't ready to give up on humanity just yet. They're not prepared to fight, but they're prepared to work hard for peace.

They meet every Tuesday evening on the steps of City Hall. Edmonton World Peace will hold a vigil every week until the bombing stops in Afghanistan. In the first four weeks of the campaign, as many as 150 people gathered there to urge government to seek non-violent solutions to the terrorism crisis.

According to Howaida Hassan, one of the group's organizers, the numbers are beginning to dwindle but plans are in place to encourage more active participation in the effort.

"We're going to get proactive," she said. "We're going to start a letter-writing campaign where people contact their MPs and other politicians to urge Canada's participation in the war be stopped."

The vigils are held every Tuesday at 7 p.m. by the City Hall pool. Speakers from various organizations make brief presentations, including updates from NGOs still working in Afghanistan.

ARE WE EVIL? Yeah, but that doesn't mean they don't have a sense of humour. The Supersuckers ain't Weird Al, as Eddie Spaghetti notes, "Let's face it, we're funny!"

Suck on this

Supersuckers make rock 'n roll. Period.

Supersuckers
Thursday, Oct. 18
at the New City Likwid Lounge

He's been working in the studio all day, but Eddie Spaghetti of the Supersuckers is happy to give an interview. Most of the conversation ends up being a series of non sequiturs ("Slipknot is my new favorite band that I don't know anything about. They look like clowns! And that's funny to me!") and cliches taken straight out of the book of Aerosmith ("It's for the fans. For the people. Because the people need rock, and dammit, who are we to keep the people from their rock?"), but it becomes quickly evident that Spaghetti could probably spend hours on the phone gleefully firing off nonsensical asides and pointed comments. He's a man possessed, after all, by the Evil Powers of Rock 'n Roll, to steal the title from the band's 1999 album. And he's patient too. After 12 years and seven albums, it's pretty safe to assume that Spaghetti and his cohorts are in this for the long haul, interviews included.

"We're gonna give it 'til we're 50," explains Spaghetti earnestly. "If things aren't working out by then, we'll look at doing something else. Maybe putting camper shelves on trucks. Or roofing," he muses. "Until then, it's rock 'n roll. I figure that gives us another two or three years."

The Supersuckers hit the ground running in 1992 with The Smoke of Hell, quickly delivered up a minor classic with La Mano Cornuda (1994), and then threw a curve ball with the outright country of Must've Been High in 1997. Their rebel rock attitude gained them a fan and a noteworthy collaboration with spiritual brethren Steve Earle (on his El Corazon album, plus a Sub Pop EP). Not surprisingly, Spaghetti makes no distinction between the fury of punk rock and the grittiness of traditional country music.

"They're similar things," he notes. "When they're good, they're both dynamite, and really simple; you don't have to be a master at your instrument to play good songs at these sort of things. That's what I like about it. The rock that we play is very rooted. It's also very modern. We don't have the seven-string guitar and the DJ in the band, that kind of stuff. There's nothing wrong with that sort of CRAP, but we just don't have it."

And that's all for the good, Eddie. Forward motion in music is a wonderful thing, but it warms the heart to think that there are reactionaries out there reminding us of the primitive, joyful noise that good rock 'n roll is built on. The Supersuckers are like the bad kids who sit at the back of the class, throwing spitballs and making barnyard noises at the teacher. Representative song titles? I Say Fuck, Sweet 'n Sour Jesus, Alone and Stinking, Retarded Bill. Guess we won't be hearing U2 cover any of these songs any time soon.

"Let's face it, we're funny! We may rock as well, but we are funny," exclaims Spaghetti. But is this a comedy act disguised as a rock band?

"No, it's not Weird Al, but y'know when you have songs like How To Maximize Your Kill Count, you've gotta kinda have a sense of humour about what you do. Or, you're Slipknot, or Korn, 'cause they don't have a sense of humour about their music."

'We don't have the seven-string guitar and the DJ in the band, that kind of stuff. There's nothing wrong with that sort of CRAP, we just don't have it.' EDDIE SPAGHETTI

And for that, millions of glowering, self-important teenage boys breathe a sigh of relief. But if the Supersuckers aren't making any advances in the angst market, they're still steadily picking up a crowd devoted to loud rock, good times, and the abuse of alcohol.

"At different times in our career, and I guess you could call it a career, we've done really well, and then we've done okay. And now, we seem to be doing really well again. I think we're kinda becoming a band that is like 'You have to see this band. If you like rock 'n' roll, you must see this band.' And that's kind of a cool thing."

The delayed arrival of their drummer caused the band to perform a 'country set' their first night in town, but they will be at full rock strenght for Thursday.

Rabson set to strut

Uppity Blues Woman takes centre stage

Ann Rabson is one blues woman who lives the best of both worlds when it comes to performing and creating.

On one hand, the singer-songwriter, pianist and guitarist has enjoyed a great deal of success as one of the driving forces in Saffire —The Uppity Blues Women. On the flip side, Rabson loves to slide into her solo persona which has led to numerous tours and the release of two albums. Edmonton area audiences have had the chance to catch Rabson working as a member of Saffire, but this weekend brings our first opportunity to hear the Virginia-based performer call all the shots for an entire night's worth of tunes. These are tunes that run the gamut from hardcore traditional to more contemporary pieces that have been molded into the blues form.

Not only will it be our first glimpse of her doing her own thing, we'll be able to hear her sing and play in a couple of settings. A portion of each evening will be set aside for a solo segment, while the rest of the program will find her backed by the Yardbird Suite's sympathetic and always enthusiastic supporting cast, led by pianist Graham Guest.

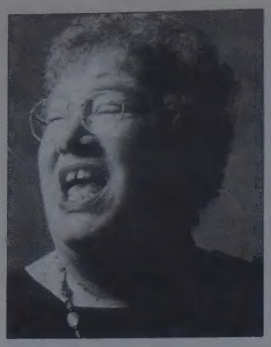
Tunes from her latest album Struttin' My Stuff, which was released a year ago, will play a prominent role in the shows as the arrangements conveniently play both sides of the fence.

No doubt we'll see her fingers cruise across the ivories on numbers like Love Song, which she wrote for her longtime hubby, and the Memphis Slim chestnut Pigalle. At other times she'll be pulling off some fluid finger-picking on something like What's Good For The Gander, another original modeled after the style Clarence Williams favoured while accompanying the legendary Bessie Smith.

"What I like about working as a solo artist is that I get to make all the decisions, and that makes it more of a pure concept. Plus musically I don't have to come up with arrangements with anyone else in mind," says Rabson from her home base.

This appearance is in fact a bit of a rarity as her solo shows are usually just that — solo.

"But it was in New York City where a band was put together for me for a show that I met Richard Crooks. He ended up drumming on Struttin' My Stuff, while I knew bassist Marty Ballou from his days of playing with Duke Robillard," continues the blues woman who made an appearance on the recently released and impressive double-disc Alligator 30th Anniversary set.



Ann Rabson

The diversity of material on Struttin' My Stuff is another reason to recommend this show, as names like Brownie McGhee, Amos Milburn, Sarah Brown, Chuck Berry and David Olney fill out the slate.

Olney may be best known for getting his material into the hands of more country-oriented artists like Emmylou Harris, but Rabson was astute enough to introduce the music of the brilliant lyricist to a blues audience. Olney's name appears twice on the album, once on a tune called The Blues Don't Care and another called Late November Afternoon, which is a collaborative effort with the featured artist.

One song we're sure to hear at the Yardbird is the title track of the latest disc. Bruce Stovel, who puts together the blues menu at the club, sent a copy of the original by Lucille Bogan to Rabson with a suggestion she cut it. She did, and gave him the proper plug for his contribution in the album liner notes.

Thoughts of a new solo disc are rolling around, and Rabson suggests she may do an all Bessie Smith album.

For now she'll keep busy doing up to eight solo shows a month and another eight as a member of Saffire.

Tickets for Ann Rabson with Graham Guest and company are available at TicketMaster outlets and the club. Showtime both nights is 9 p.m.

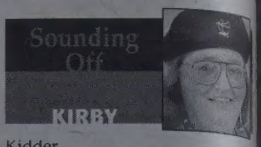
Three times the blues

Come on in my kitchen — yet again



You better come on in my kitchen, it's going to be raining outdoors. We can hope it won't rain (or snow) on this year's third installment of the annual classic acoustic blues show. When you are invited to Come On In My Kitchen, it's actually to Festival Place, that lovely little theatre in Sherwood Park that for the past two years has hosted this night of Delta and country blues with Mark Sterling. This guitar slinger and singer whiled away his childhood in this very neighbourhood; and the prodigal son returns from some busy road trips with Adam Gregory to perform this night.

Sterling nailed it when he described the atmosphere of these shows as "…like a folk festival workshop where they just let you keep on playing." That was the intention of these shows when they began in 1999: take three very good, experienced feel players who have never played together before. Give them a genre such as acoustic Delta and country blues. Put them in a great venue and let all hell break loose.

That's just what happened at the first show three years ago when Mark Sterling, Big Dave McLean and Seattle stringflasher David Rea come together in what was a memorable evening of some fine magic in music.

Last year's show had Sterling and Rea team up with cool cat Harry Manx, a blues player who slides on an Indian instrument (Mohan veena) that left us feeling like we'd heard Jimmy Reed on a sitar.

Blues fans will rejoice upon hearing Big Dave McLean is coming in from Canada's Windy City (think Portage and Main) to join us again for this year's show. Lest we forget, the blues scene there is rich and vibrant, from the early days with Hound Dog, to now when you can still hear the vets such as Big Dave, Brent Parkin and Gord Kidder.

Keyboardist Graham Guest is also a Winnipeg native, and he immersed himself in the blues scene there as he did here when he arrived years ago, to hunker down with mates like Grant Stovel, Jim Guibosh, et al. Guest's passion for and knowledge of this style of blues make him a welcome addition to the trio.

"Graham's a very good buddy — I've known him for a long time," explains McLean. "He's played with lots of people here in Winnipeg… I'm a fan of his, for sure."

McLean's first Stony Plain record, For the Blues… Always, was produced by Colin James and garnered a Prairie Music Award).

"We'll probably do another album within the next three or four months — I'm talking to Holger over Stony Plain, we've got some stuff to work out… I'm in no hurry. As long as the finished product is something I can look back on and smile — something I can be proud of…"

The lion's share of McLean's gigs are solo, but he has bands in every Canuck city he lands in. "Here I have The Perpetrators — the former Muddytones — they back me up when we're doing my stuff. In Calgary I use Tim Williams' band, in Saskatoon it's Doug Scarrow — I call 'em the Northern Muddytones — in Toronto Raoul and The Big Time are a jump swing band I play with, and in Vancouver it's Johnny Tornado and the West Coast Flyers."

The Come On In My Kitchen III show is next Thursday, Oct. 25, 7:30 p.m. at Festival Place, in Sherwood Park. Tickets are available at Ticketmaster or 449-FEST.

Terry Morrison preps for the studio

by Gary McGOWAN

Terry Morrison

FAQ FREQUENTY ASKED QUESTIONS

Name: Terry Morrison

Known For: Playing her own inimitable brand of contemporary folk/roots music.

Next Gig: Friday, Oct. 19 at Bonnie Doon Community Hall (9240 – 93 St.)

How You Spent Your Summer: Mostly playing in B.C. I have a circuit through the interior of the province I try to do at least once a year. One of the highlights was playing the Vancouver Island Folk Festival in Comox. I did an amazing songwriters workshop with Tim Williams, John Hall, David Essig and a woman named Eliza Gillkyson I'd seen at the Kerrivale Folk Fest in Texas last year.

Future Plans: It's way past time to make another CD. In fact the Bonnie Doon Hall show is sort of a CD fundraiser. I'm planning on working with Shannon Johnson and Colin Lay on the disc.

Inspirations: People like Leonard Cohen, Joni Mitchell and especially The Band really got me into all of this.

Favourite Artist: I've got a couple right now. Eliza Gillkyson who I mentioned earlier has a great CD called Hard Times In Babylon that I like to play. It's not new, but Iris DeMent's The Way I Should is a great CD.

Great Musical Moment: Opening for Richard Thompson at the Myer Horowitz Theatre last year. Getting that call was unexpected but much appreciated. I had a chance to visit with him after the show. He's a really nice guy and a brilliant musician Favourite Lyric: It's a line out of Iris DeMent's Wasteland Of The Free. "We got CEOs makin' 200 times the worker's pay / But they'll fight like hell against raising the minimum wage." It's not necessarily the way I write, but I can really appreciate it.

SMALLS CHANGE Rumours that Corb Lund (left) and his country side-project figured into the smalls' demise just ain't true, says guitarist/banjoist Dug Bevans (right.)

So long, smalls

Edmonton's favourite hard rock band hangs it up after one final show

by Geoff MOYSA

Preview
the smalls
Saturday, Oct. 20
at Red's

The prairies of Canada aren't what they used to be. Sure, the simple and comforting wheat fields still stretch expansively before the eye and oil derricks keep churning out King Ralph's black gold, but slowly, inexorably, things are changing here. Prairie purists shake their heads sadly as each grain elevator topples, and Staples-style megastores multiply like rabbits to obscure the horizon. Perhaps most telling is the official retirement of the smalls.

With a career spanning 11 years and four full-length albums, the Smalls have become as much of a staple of Alberta life as Taber corn and long, harsh winters. The independent music mainstays are finally hanging up their spurs, however, to both the sadness and relief of guitarist Dug Bevans.

"Obviously there's sadness, but I think we've all dealt with our demons about this coming to an end," says Bevans as the smalls embark across Canada on a final tour for their fans.

"There's usually a couple of people that come up to you after the show [that] are kind of teary-eyed, telling you about how you've been a huge part of their youth."

It was just two years ago Bevans and his band mates were preparing to pack up and move their base to the state of Texas in search of greener musical pastures. The decision to leave became a crossroads that the smalls couldn't navigate together.

"That was what we needed to move forward, was to move someplace other than Canada," he says. "One of us was having a hard time with the idea and said he didn't want to go. We had to decide at that point if we wanted to get another drummer or not, and we decided against it."

'None of us have really had jobs since, like, 1992. It's going to be like stepping back into reality, I guess. It'll be weird I guess, but personally I'm looking forward to the change.' DUG BEVANS

The band went their separate ways, with Bevans leaving to travel Asia for most of the year and bassist Corby Lund making the trek to Texas solo. Bevans is quick to point out that the decision to split was made as a band, and any rumors circulating to the contrary are unfounded.

"It seems like every second person that comes up to me says, 'hey, that's too bad about Corby breaking up the band,'" he says. "The Corb Lund Band has really nothing to do with the smalls breaking up. Corby was one of the last voters saying we should stick it out."

Although Bevans is confident in his ability to move on and begin anew, the future of the now ex-smalls is still uncertain. The song My Saddlehorse Has Died from their last full-length album may have been prophetic, as now Bevans and company suddenly find themselves without the glue that held them together for the last 11 years.

"None of us have really had jobs since like 1992," he laughs. "It's going to be like stepping back into reality, I guess. It'll be weird, but I'm personally looking forward to the change."

Some of Bevans' plans include going back to school to study graphic design and multimedia while Lund will remain busy with the Corb Lund Band and singer Mike Caldwell and drummer Terry Johnson are toying with different musical projects. While they won't be able to venture out on the road to deliver their prairie-cooked country metal blend any longer, Bevans is more than happy with what the smalls have accomplished.

"I don't think there's another band in Canada that's really even touched what we've done on an independent level."

Wherever their travels may take them, the smalls remain Alberta prairie boys, and Bevans is sure that their paths will cross again. "After living together for so long, in and out of vans and houses, it's more like being in a family," he says. "It's like how you don't really hang out with your brothers and sisters, but you still really care for them. And when you finally move out of your house you sort of miss hanging around. Eventually everyone grows up and leaves the shelter of home and this house will certainly be different without the smalls living in it.

Ford lets loose

Vancouver band has enthusiasm to spare

John Ford
with the Joel Plaskett Emergency
Friday, Oct. 19
at the Urban Lounge

It's been a while since John Ford has passed through town, and the band has kept busy since they impressed a near-capacity crowd last winter at the Likwid Lounge. More acclaimed live shows, an excellently received debut album, and a few shows in the last few weeks, opening for Moist front man David Usher. From all indications, they held their own.

"He's got a really great, excited young crowd," relates guitarist/vocalist Rich Hope over the phone from the band's home haunt of Vancouver. "They're just into music and they don't seem to have any preconceptions or inhibitions. And most people when they come to those things think, 'Hey, opening band, let's check them out.' And I think we blew 'em away. Or that's the word we got from a lot of 'em."

The experience of playing to a less sophisticated audience too enthused about the novelty of a live show to bother with striking a stance was clearly a high point for the band. Reality returned quickly, however, when they made their way back home to Vancouver.

"And then we got home, and we did a show with Zen Guerilla, who are a great band, but their audience can be kind of hipster-oriented, y'know. So it was back to playing to people who are sort of like pulling teeth to get them to even move. They know they like rock, but these people just have trouble letting loose."

John Ford, however, is not a band that has trouble letting loose. Stalwartly part of a lineage that would have to include the Rolling Stones, the Clash and the Replacements, the band plays with a genuine joy that can't help but be transmitted to the audience. Maybe that's why Hope, who originally moved to Vancouver from Edmonton to kickstart a solo career, felt so irresistibly drawn to the group in the first place.

"Back in 1996, we shared a jam complex," explains Hope. "We were in two separate rooms across the hall, and we used to hear each other play classic-rockish, country-type songs. Like I'd stop playing, and suddenly hear them play Who'll Stop The Rain by CCR. And they'd hear me play some old Glen Campbell number or something. And we'd both think to ourselves 'Hey, they're doing my thing!' And then we eventually came together."

And so Hope eventually changed priorities, from solo act to co-conspirator.

"It's taken a backseat to this, just because I really enjoy playing in this band. And I do write for the band, and co-write, it's still really creative. But when you're part of a team, and this is a real team thing, you kinda have to make a sacrifice."

The group will be sacrificing a certain amount as they continue to tour. The show in Edmonton will be only one of about 25 dates across Canada, a courageous number considering the economics of touring as an independent group.

"We're keeping the wolves at bay, I suppose, and we're making enough to survive while we're out there. I guess that's all we can really ask for right now. And we have a full stock of merch and records to sell."

With one of Hollywood's greatest Western directors as the inspiration behind their name, John Ford are sometimes expected to live up to a country leaning that is often only implicit in their sound. Since alt-country and rock seem to be on parallel paths of favour at the moment, this might just work for them.

"I always find it a little troublesome that it gets separated into country, alt-country, rock or whatever. Obviously people want to define stuff, but ... it's just that blues, rock, and country are three different versions of the same thing."

Comparisons may be odious, but they're also inevitable, and drummer Anthony Aguiar of Loco accepts his band's linking to Coal Chamber with good grace.

"When we first started out, I think it got under our skin a little bit, but now we're at the point where when people see us play, if they had thought we sounded like Coal Chamber, then they're not as convinced," says Aguiar. "But they're a great band — there's nothing wrong with that."

It's a bit of a renaissance for hard rock, with once firmly underground sounds making their presence felt in the mainstream.

"There are a lot of bands coming out now that have a more mature, more grinding sound to them. Bands like Slipknot, and Mudvayne. Those are bands that don't tailor to a watered-down crowd. Mudvayne are almost like jazz/metal, while Slipknot, if you listen to the guitars and drums, are death metal."

With the release of their Breathe EP, produced by Mike Plotnikoff (Fear Factory, Kiss) and Rob Thiessen (Noise Therapy, Flybanger), Loco are preparing for the next step in their evolution, which leads, inevitably, to the United States.

"It's always easier to make it in the States. I know that sounds like a strange kind of quote, but you've got to look at the amount of people there as compared to Canada. Plus, I think heavy music as a genre just goes over there."

Loco is joined by local heavy dudes Chunk and Calgary's One 900 at the Rev on Friday, Oct. 19. Doors are at 9:30 p.m.

■ NETTWERK

Wiser is the second album from Rvan and Rebecca Coseboom. The first, We Only Love You, was released in 1999 on a now-defunct label, and is apparently impossible to find. If you have a copy, let me know, because if that album is anywhere near as good as Wiser, I'd pay just about any price for it. Wiser is a brilliantly subtle blend of languid electronica and live, mostly classical instrumentation, sugared over with Rebecca Coseboom's utterly gorgeous vocals. It is one of the first mainly electronic albums I've heard that doesn't make the mistake of remixing a great voice into oblivion. Studio engineer (and drummer) Count, who has worked for New Order, No Doubt, and Run DMC, clearly knew a good thing when he heard one. This album is nearly perfect. My only complaint is that Nettwerk should have released it on their Nutone imprint; it could use the talent.

But without Stereolab to guide, who among us would know the beauty of the harpsichord, or the farfisa organ? And who would sing to you such lyrics as "A military regime/in democratic disguise/that lies in all impunity," complete with la-la-las? Okay, maybe Propagandhi, but while those boys tap into a deep current of political anger, they've never once betrayed even the slightest interest in the Beach Boys circa Pet Sounds, and some of us have never forgiven them for that. Stereolab, however, set their musings about the failure of capitalism to shimmering lounge pop of the type Brian Wilson helped pioneer, lilting melodies and minimalist beats, not unlike that Steve Reich/Dionne Warwick collaboration you secretly dream of. Different for girls

Music sheds light on mysteries of fair sex

by Craig ELLIOTT

You gotta admit, in its brief lifespan, rock and roll's track record has been pretty good. From the very start, it seems, that if rock and roll put its mind to it, there was nothing that couldn't be done. Ending world hunger — check. Bringing communism crashing down, putting a stop to injusticein South Africa, getting people, especially guys in rock bands, laid — check, check, check.

Isn't it ironic, then, don't you think, that what proves to be rock and roll's most enduring failures is that at which it has worked hardest: a true, lasting understanding of girls? Yes, there have been many temporary victories to sing and strum over the years, but do any of them go right in the long term? No. Does rock and roll know girls? No.

It can't for lack of trying, though. Austin, TX trio Spoon gave it a go, and now they report back with the coyly named Girls Can Tell. Can tell what? What we're really thinking? That they can make our brains explode without hardly trying? Yes and yes, but that's just what we learn when Britt Daniel croons the album's first two lines: "Don't say a word/The last one's still stinging."

From there it's a blur of dirty, slashing guitars, lean bass, cracking drums and fashion tips, delivered with the panty-peelingest bray available in the year 2001.

But for all the big talk, how much do Spoon really know about girls, in terms of hard data and replicable experiments? Not much, they're boys. But here is the Kim Band, featuring Kim Bingham — who was in Me, Mom and Morgentaler five trillion years ago — offering a course in Girlology. Ask any prof who teaches entry-level courses to auditoriums full of hundreds of first-years, and they'll tell you: you gotta use big, broad gestures to reach the kids at the very back, and if you don't hook 'em early, you don't hook 'em at all. The Kim Band charge through three consecutive barnstormers before anyone remembers to breathe, but just when you think the whole semester is going to go like this, it doesn't. A slow song, a boring fast song, another slow one — all that momentum is lost and, just like in university, I started skipping. When the phone rings the night before the Girlology final exam, that'll be me, asking to borrow your lecture notes. Can I?

If rock really wants to know the hearts and minds of girls, a period of strict, monkish self-instruction is in order, with Edith Frost's Wonder Wonder as the text. Frost won't commit herself to the rock idiom; loud guitars and pounding drums lack the subtlety that her wry, lumimous songs require if they are to obsess even the world-weariest of indie geekboys. Instead, she picks and chooses musical ideas from lullabies, western tunes, waltzes and possibly the odd Liz Phair track, then draws on a vast array of talented friends to colour them with steel guitar or an organ, strings, bells or a woodwind section if need be.

It's a difficult task, understanding girls and what they're all about, but don't lose hope. Just because something is difficult doesn't mean it's not quite rewarding. You just need to work a little harder is all, and the miracle of girls will be yours to know

BILBO (SEAN HOY) MEETS SMAUG in Fringe Theatre Adventures' production of The Hobbit.

"I'm in the digestive tract."

The expression "bit part" usually refers to roles of the smaller variety. But Beth Graham's bit part in Fringe Theatre Productions' The Hobbit involves being a part of something rather large — a dragon, specifically.

This dragon, whose name — Smaug — may be familiar, is so very large that five actors are enlisted to help bring his fire-breathing frame to life, and a sixth, Chris Craddock, gives the incendiary lizard his voice.

Of speaking for a character whose body he doesn't control, Craddock says, "It's tough for both me and George [Szilagy — front o' Smaug]." But Craddock grows twinkly eyed when he describes the beast. "The character goes all the way around the stage. It looks like the whole thing encircles the stage. It's really grand and well-manipulated."

In this production, twinkly eye is catching among the cast. Just ask any of the players about their favourite character.

"I'm really liking the spider lately," says Graham. "We have these great costumes. Randall [Fraser] has made these amazing things that completely transform the human body, especially the spider costume. It's just a nice great evil scene. I get to get in touch with my dark side."

For Vancouver actor David Thomson, "Gollum is the one that's most memorable. It's also the one that maybe requires the most work. I enjoy it because of that. He's such a weird, strange character. And the costume that they've designed for me is so strange, too. He's out of proportion. His arms are extra-long somehow and have an extra elbow joint. He has four fingers and they seem to be be extra-long. His eyes are bulbous and glow in the dark and sit up on top of his head like a frog's."

The performers get just as excited about Middle Earth. "The set is like a huge jungle gym," says Thomson, "with stairs and caves and hidden entrances and doors and trees that we can climb. There's so much you can do on a set like that. They're doing some amazing design work."

The performers have some amazing work of their own to do. Not only are all those costumes physically demanding — "We're going to have to have thighs of steel," says Graham — but the actors also play as many as six roles. It can be tricky to keep them straight, Graham says. "Oh! I'm still speaking like a dwarf, even though I'm a spider."

Kim Selody's adapted for the stage J.R.R. Tolkein's 1937 story of Bilbo Baggins' quest. The result has been something of a Canadian success story. But timing, in this case, was everything. You don't have to be the Gandalf the Wizard to know that a dollar-spinning film version of The Hobbit's lengthy sequel Lord of the Rings is soon to arrive, fully equipped with digital wizardry and product tie-ins. The rights to a stage adaptation of The Hobbit would be very difficult to arrange now, says director and Fringe Theatre Adventures artistic producer Darryl Lindenbach.

Even without competitive pressure from the world of film, it took Leslee Silverman of Manitoba Theatre for Young People five years to acquire the rights for the production of a stage adaptation.

Now, Edmonton audiences are in for a treat. Although FTA had planned to mount the play after renovations to its space were completed, Lindenbach says the company decided, "Why not give people an opportunity to know what happens before The Lord of the Rings? There is a substantial amount of information in The Hobbit that's pretty nice to have going into the Rings trilogy."

And while the cast is glad to be out of the chute before the film, they aren't at all worried about having to compete with an arsenal of special effects for the affection of their audience.

"I think some of the reason that all of this computer animation stuff falls flat," says Craddock, "is that people can tell when something's there and when it's not. In live theatre all the stuff we got, you can't deny — it's right there in front of you. The scale of this thing is going to take kids heads off and put them on the other way around."

Beside, says Lindenbach, "In Middle Earth, it's more about an internal than an external power. Even Gandalf's power isn't about Hollywood pyrotechnics. It is not sci-fi. It's much more real."

Indeed, says Sean Hoy, who plays the titular Hobbit, "Bilbo is just this little everyman and doesn't have any special powers or any extraordinary need to save the world or change it, but just finds himself forced by circumstance to find a way to stay alive and help his friends."

He says that his job, as an actor, is just to be the vessel for the children and adults to experience the journey.

"It's not like being Bruce Willis — it's more about being scared and facing it and going on."

Lindenbach adds that audiences shouldn't make the mistake of assuming that theatre for kids and parents has a marshmallow centre. "It's not a kids' story. It's life. And I think that's what kids should be seeing. We shouldn't be pandering. Family theatre doesn't mean you can't challenge people."

The beauty of Henrik Ibsen's 1882 classic An Enemy of the People is its endless political and psychological relevance, says the director of the production that opens in Edmonton this weekend.

"You could mount this play in any month in any year and people would still say it's relevant — there are endless parallels," says Marti Maraden, Artistic Director of Ottawa's National Arts Centre (NAC).

Produced jointly by NAC and the Citadel Theatre (one of two co-productions being undertaken by the theatres this season), Enemy of the People tells the story of a small town violently divided by the discovery of a dangerous contamination to the water supply of a tourist-oriented spa.

"For example, when I commissioned this translation [by David Young], Walkerton [and its tainted water scandal] hadn't happened yet," Maraden says.

"The play's about the temptation to be self serving and to indulge in short-term thinking rather than following the truth," she explains, noting that the play underlines how fragile public taste for truth can be especially in time of danger or stress.

For example, the director points to a part in the play where a character stresses about how the contamination means he won't be able to find tenants to pay for the addition he's built to his house, rather than the fact that people might die if something isn't done about the polluted water. "The play makes you really angry, yet it's so outrageous that's its funny,"

Enemy of the People is at its heart "the story of two brothers: one the small town's mayor [John Wright] and the other a doctor [Tom Rooney] who's lived in exile for years."

"The doctor opens a health spa which does well initially, but people start getting sick," she continues.

"He sends away samples and discovers that water is horridly polluted. He's hailed as a hero at first, until it's pointed out that it's going to cost loads of money to dffect repairs and that the spa will have to close for two years — then people start to have second thoughts."

"The work is very local, very domestic but also says much about the bigger world picture from the political to the mythical," says Maraden, who points out that she's worked the sound of water into the play's soundscape to underline some of the iconic and basic references and symbols built into the work.

"We've worked hard to keep the reality, the clarity of the play intact," she said.

Verdi's Rigoletto one of best operas of its era

Rigoletto
Edmonton Opera
October 20, 23, 25
Jubilee Auditorium

Aficionados are going to be treated to a refreshingly straightforward production of one of the art-form's seminal works at the season launch of the Edmonton Opera, says the director of Rigoletto.

"We're going to play the piece in period, bringing forward the myth of Rigoletto as clearly as we can," says Henry Akina, the General Director of Hawaii Opera Theatre, the production's co-producer.

"Working with this play is wonderful in that it's the artistic equivalent of peeling an onion: it has so many layers," says Akina of what he sees as one of the "best made operas" of the era. "Not only do you get heightened emotions like that of Rigoletto's desire for revenge, you also get one of the most tight operas in the genre — a piece that never lets the emotions go a moment longer than they should."

Following his early hit Nabucco (1842), Rigoletto is seen as Verdi's first true masterpiece and the template for other hits such as Trovatore (1853), La Traviata (1853), Macbeth (1865), Aida (1871) and Otello (1887).

Based on Victor Hugo's play Le Roi s'amuse, Rigoletto is a roman à clef about the court of the French king Francois I, which Verdi transposed to the more politically neutral court of the Duke of Mantua. A "rather grim tale", Rigoletto is the self-titled tragedy about a widowed and hunchbacked court jester, trying to protect the chastity of his only daughter from his patron and mentor, the debauched and womanizing Duke. Sadly, the cursed Rigoletto fails to protect his daughter and in the end succumbs to a doomed vendetta attempt.

Boasting a stellar cast lead by Carlo Scibelli, Jason Howard and Lyne Fortin, Rigoletto also marks the Edmonton Opera performance debut of five Edmonton Opera chorus members including Mavis Calihoo, last seen on stage as Donna Anna in the NUOVA (Newly United Operatic Vocalists Association) production of Don Giovanni earlier this summer.

"The Edmonton Opera has been so supportive and this role is such a great learning opportunity," says the 33-year-old who's playing the nurse Giovanna.

An actor's director

Theatre Network's Brad Moss in the right place to make his mark

by Jacqueline JANELLE

After actor Jeff Page saw High Life at the Roxy in April of 1999, he was determined to work with its director, Brad Moss. Page is now into his fourth production with Moss — and he still thinks the world of him. "He is a very generous director," says Page, "he respects what actors bring to the work, and he allows them to have ownership of it without being afraid to give feedback."

In 1999 Brad Moss was the newly appointed Artistic Director for Theatre Network. He had spent most of the four years prior as director of NextFest — the Syncrude Next Generation Arts Festival. Moss still has a paternal attachment to the annual Edmonton festival dedicated to showcasing new artists and their work. "It is the best thing I have ever been a part of. Seeing artists meeting each other at a young time. It's one of those things where you feel you're giving back and helping to create a community," says Moss. It also gave him a preview of Edmonton's budding artists. "Daniel Arnold is a real talent, as is Medina Hahn. I feel lucky that, because of NextFest, I get to meet these people."

Originally from Quebec, Moss fell into theatre while attending Bishops University. In 1985, he took a show to a drama festival and won for best show and best actor. "When that happened, my thinking changed," says Moss, "I decided I wanted to take this a bit more seriously." He completed the drama program at Bishops and, after toiling in Vancouver for a few years, entered the University of Alberta's Master of Fine Arts program in Directing. He had heard that Edmonton was a strong theatre town. "When I got here, I was impressed with the calibre of the work and the amount of work that goes on. Some of the best theatre I've seen has been in this town. It's an exciting place to be."

As he prepares to lead Theatre Network into its 27th season, Moss feels he is in the right place to make his mark on Canadian theatre. "I'm doing what I like to do. I don't have aspirations to go to Shaw or Stratford and do that type of work. I like doing the new Canadian stuff." Jeff Page says it shows: "He was first director of my generation to have a theatre here. He brought a whole bunch of interesting new work to Theatre Network. He stepped in as a spokesperson for this new generation and livened the place up."

When asked which is his favourite production, Moss hesitates: "The shows I've worked on are like children: you love some, you don't like others." He says his passions are subject to whims, one week he will long to produce a musical and the next he hankers for Eugene Stickland. "There's a lot of plays I'd like to do, I go through phases." He says his current production, of Michel Tremblay's For The Pleasure of Seeing Her Again, opening at the Roxy this weekend, is one he's been dying to direct.

Moss' next big project is to renovate the theatre. He has plans to include a rehearsal facility and shop for his baby, NextFest. "I'm helping to create a little entertainment factory," he laughs.

When he's not at the Roxy Moss can be found lounging in his swimsuit. He's a hot spring aficionado, "I've hit just about every hot spring on the west side. I just like a hot soak." Otherwise he's frantically pouring over blueprints, directing plays, or helping run a non-profit theatre, and loving every minute of it. "I feel very lucky. I can't imagine wanting any other theatre. I look around in Canada and go, 'This is the theatre for me!'"

WHEN HE'S NOT IMMERSED IN THEATRE Brad Moss can be found cooling his heels in a hot spring.

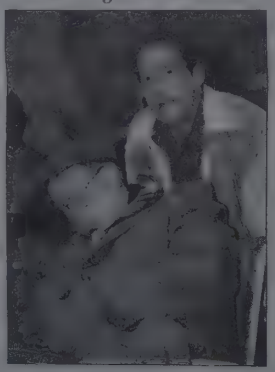
★★★★1/2 (out of five)

Imagine embarking on a five-day road trip with someone you have almost nothing in common with, and without even the radio to console you. Would you drive each other crazy? Or would you manage to find some common ground? Buckle up and hold on tight, 'cause we're going to Mesa!

Jeff Haslam plays Paul, a 35-year-old writer who agrees to escort his girlfriend's 93-year-old grandfather, Bud (Ashley Wright), on his annual trek to the retirement village of "Citrus Gardens." And so, with a notebook in one suitcase and prunes in the other, our mismatched duo hits the interstate.

Mesa had me in stitches. Paul's exasperation with Bud's refusal to diverge even slightly from the itinerary is as palpable as Bud's vexation when Paul forces him to do so, and their struggles to communicate across the cavernous generation gap are tremendously funny. Among other things, these two men have completely different ideas of what a road trip is all about, and the result is wonderfully comical. I mean, really, what can a malcontent slacker, unwilling to sacrifice his artistic dreams for something as mundane as 'earning a living', possibly have in common with a man who's done everything by the book his entire life (even going so far as asking his employer's permission to wed)?



Ashley Wright and Jeff Haslam

A poignant subtext underscores Mesa's humour, reminding us that while old age can bring one wisdom, emotional strength and psychological vigour, the downside is a physical frailty that sometimes makes life a struggle.

Mesa is exceptionally well cast: as Paul, Jeff Haslam says as much with a raised eyebrow and incredulous squint as he does with Doug Curtis's whip-smart dialogue. And Ashley Wright, as Bud, conveys the vicissitudes of old age fabulously: crotchety and demanding, he embodies the pragmatic. (He is also particularly enjoyable as a faux cowboy in Tombstone. You won't think of Wyatt Earp the same way again!) Together, their timing is impeccable, and their chemistry superb. Kudos also to Narda McCarroll whose luminous pink, orange and purple set brings the desert to us (or is that us to the desert?), and to Dave Clarke and Peter Moller, whose soundscapes are oh-so-smooth. From Martin Denny-esque exotica to the cheese of Lawrence Welk, they effortlessly evoke everything from the road, to the desert, to the casino, to the Wild West and to, last but not least, the old-timers' Saturday night partjes.

Mesa unleashed a couple of the best jokes I've heard in ages — and it made me wish I'd known my grandparents better.

Truly delightful and well worth seeing.

ORANGES LEADS CARNIVAL

Blood Oranges, a new horror play by Trevor Schmidt, based on an actual unsolved poisoning, leads the lineup for Northern Light Theatre's second Carnival of Souls, a spooky fall festival. Other otherworldly carnival happenings include the House of Screams (Oct. 25 to Oct. 31), a chilling tour of an antique downtown building; The Urban Tales Cabaret (Oct. 26 & 27), an adult-oriented evening of readings; and Song for Dr. Caligari (Nov. 1 to Nov. 4), a remounting of the live-music presentation of The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari created by Dave Clarke.

While Blood Oranges doesn't open until Oct. 25 at The Stanley Milner Library, ghouls with gumptions, however, will want to head to the Paris Market (10363 - 104 St.) Oct. 20 and 21 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. for the Halloween Market — a riot of scary arts and crafts and family activities. You'll also be able to fashion your own light source from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. at the Lantern Workshop. The Workshop is $10 for individuals, $15 for families. The Market and Workshop will also be held on Oct. 27 and 28. Call 424-2511 for more information. For more Carnival of Souls information, visit northernlighttheatre.com.

WEIR BREAKS SHADOW RECORD

Shadow Theatre's recently ended production of Conor McPherson's The Weir made company history by grossing 17 percent more than any previous Shadow production, outpacing all previous season-openers by 33 percent. The Weir was directed by James DeFelice, the gentleman responsible for Shadow's previous box office champ. Perhaps the strong start to the season was in the cards: the number of Shadow season subscriptions has increased by 42 per cent.

SOLDIERING ON Douglas Coupland's latest novel, among other things, follows a family making its way through a bewildering procession of tragedy and triumph.

Psychotic reaction

New novel may be Coupland's best yet

by Brian GOLIGHTLY

Review

All Families are Psychotic
by Douglas Coupland
Random House of Canada

In a way, All Families Are Psychotic is a perfect novel for our times. Mouthwatering and toe-tapping, full of tabloid pathos and lurid cultural detail, it has the irresistible appeal of channel-surfing while maintaining a purposeful course. Rife with disaster, modernity and dysfunction, this book is fun to read and is in many ways Douglas Coupland's best yet.

The last time the Drummond family got together, two of them were hit by a single bullet fired by dad. They're that close. They converge again in Florida for the shuttle launch that will carry superachieving daughter Sarah into space: the closer they get to each other, the higher the tension and incidence of... well, incidents.

Coupland has created a sort of fluorescent revelation in prose. As the plot flickers between beautiful and ugly, good and bad, motion and stillness, something interesting occurs. The mind, trying to keep pace, becomes confused, as extremes of darkness and light come close to occupying the same moment, if not the same space.

At the centre of the action is the story of Janet Drummond, ex-wife, AIDS sufferer, Internet afficionado and mother in the middle of the troubled clan. One of the novel's most satisfying aspects is her development from protagonist to heroine. Janet Drummond may be the author's most lovingly drawn character thus far.

The astronaut daughter Sarah is a shining, distant family ideal for most of the book and participates in most of the events from the relative safety of a cell phone connection. With a limb anomaly caused by her mother's use of thalidomide, Sarah is one of many facets of the theme of infection and toxicity that permeates this family drama.

Toxicity has been on Douglas Coupland's mind a lot in the last few years. The writing of AFAP coincided with his reemergence as a sculptor, mounting a fascinating show called Spike, a reference to a dramatic spike in the incidence of limb anomalies in newborns in the Vancouver area. One of the children born at that time was Coupland's niece. The result was "a very large and strange transformation" in Coupland's family, and eventually an epiphany in a Wal Mart that led to the giant depictions of detergent, shampoo and other bottles that comprise most of the Spike show.

All Families Are Psychotic is the kind of book that is well-crafted and intentional enough to give birth to bizarre literary-numerological treatises on the significance of certain page numbers, a wonderful recursive metaphor of modern life. With the incredible accretion of cultural errata, pessimism, optimism and plain craziness contained herein, it's a wonder that it's even intelligible, let alone invitingly readable, infused with a kind of pragmatic lightness.

Nice to think there may be a quiet core of truth to be found in the white noise of modern life.

Hell ain't so bad

From Hell
starring Johnny Depp
opens Friday, Oct. 19
Cineplex Odeon
★★★ (out of five)

From Hell's opening scene is quintessential Hughes Brothers, filling the screen with a loving close-up of Johnny Depp bogart-ing a huge opium pipe. A Victorian period piece (based on a graphic novel) may sound conceptually out of place in the Hughes' oeuvre, but they've cleverly adapted the material to fit their tastes. Arguably, however, it's a move made at the expense of the book's best qualities.

Like the Alan Moore/Eddie Campbell comic, From Hell is an imaginative take on the Jack The Ripper murders of 1888, locating the crimes at the centre of a vast Masonic conspiracy. Johnny Depp plays Inspector Fred Abberline, a psychic detective with a weakness for "chasing the dragon" in seedy opium dens. (Depp's character conflates the comic's two real-life protagonists, Abberline and the pseudo-psychic Robert Lees.) Guided by gory opium visions, Abberline and his trusty sergeant sidekick (Robbie Coltrane) pound the cobblestones of London's Whitechapel slum, always one step behind the faceless fiend systematically butchering a circle of prostitutes. As Abberline ferrets out evidence, he discovers a method to the murderer's madness, and far-reaching implications that could topple Queen Victoria's throne. Falling in love with one of the endangered prostitutes (Heather Graham) doesn't make his job any easier, either.

Despite the geographical/historical departure from their previous films, From Hell touches on familiar Hughes Brothers territory: prostitution (American Pimp), risk-taking born of desperation (Dead Presidents), and ghetto violence (Menace II Society). The directors's affection for the disenfranchised leads them to humanize the Ripper's victims in a way history often does not.

So far so good, but a lot of cool stuff is missing. What makes the From Hell comic such a great read is how writer Alan Moore balances exhaustive researchand fanciful parades of historical cameos (including John "Elephant Man" Merrick and Buffalo Bill Cody), resulting in something like a superfreaky version of E.L. Doctorow's Ragtime — topped up with oodles of mouthwatering Freemason speculation. The movie really trims the Masonic content, thereby foregoing most of the story's epic paranoia. Like poi son droplets swirled into absinthe, the comic offers a murky glimpse into hidden forces of great sickness and beauty... but the movie comes off like an above-average episode of Profiler, marred by occasional lapses into love-in-the-time-of-syphilis Pretty Woman mode. As a film, From Hell is merely an entertaining whodunit.

On a final note, without spoiling the Ripper's unmasking, let it be known that murder isn't the worst crime committed on the screen. Here's a brainteaser for all you armchair psychic detectives: Why, following two hours of period costumes and brooding cellos, are the closing credits paired with a booming Marilyn Manson remix?! To quote the old bird herself, we are not amused.

American Rhapsody compelling, timely

An American Rhapsody
Starring Nastassja Kinski and Tony Goldwyn
opens Friday, Oct. 19
at the Princess Theatre
★★★ 1/2 out of five

A [illegible] ading title — it's ab[illegible] split by the repressive [illegible] atmosphere of post[illegible] Peter and his wife Margit, played by Tony Goldwyn and Nastassja Kinski, are sitting on the laurels of a successful book publishing com pany as the snake of corrupted socialism begins to threaten their lives. They decide, almost too late, to flee Budapest, but ugly circumstances force them to leave their baby daughter, Suzanne, to be raised by loving strangers in the countryside. Six years pass and Peter's family, his wife, his oldest daughter, begin to acclimatize to "free" America, haunted by the guilt of leaving Suzanne behind. Suzanne, meanwhile, is blissfully oblivious, swimming in the love of her adopted parents... who, understandably, don't want to see her leave them for America.

While not as visually fellating as, say Antonia's Line, nor as deliciously desperate as Doctor Zhivago this is still a film in that wonderful neighborhood, the location shots and Hungarian actors particularly credible

As we ourselves prepare for more war, this is an interesting couple hours showing the resolve of a family nonetheless detonated by its aftereffects.

A WHOLE NEW DREW? After a string of light roles and marriage to a stone-cold freak, Drew Barrymore injects a little gravity into her c.v. with Riding in Cars with Boys.

Riding with Drew

Is new drama Barrymore's ticket to credibility?

by Cynthia AMSDEN

Riding in Cars with Boys
starring Drew Barrymore
opens Friday, Oct. 19
Cineplex Odeon

The Americans have commenced bombing Afghanistan. This is exactly 25 minutes before Drew Barrymore's interview. A publicist arrives to announce Drew is visibly shaken. "Please be gentle" was the suggestion.

The scion of Hollywood royalty, daughter of John Drew Barrymore, great-granddaughter of Maurice Costello, god-daughter of Steven Spielberg, Drew, at the age of 26, has 53 acting credits and seven producer or executive producer credits to her name.

Love her or dismiss her, you have to shelve your prejudices and accept that the girl packs serious leverage. What is interesting is that while she feels a genuine responsibility to nurture her massive teen girl following, Barrymore appears to be growing weary of being a commodity.

While other actresses in her rangeare still feeding at the ingenue trough, Barrymore went through that phase a decade ago. Perhaps it's having her $3 million house burn down and then getting married to someone who, insane or not, goes through a bout with cancer. It appears to be having an effect. Barrymore is looking for new credibility.

Riding in the Car With Boys is her first step in that direction. It's not a huge step, but it is movement away from Cinderella and Charlie's Angels material. Based on a biography by Beverly Donofrio, it is set in the late '60s. Barrymore plays Bev, who gets pregnant at 15. Her best friend Fay (Brittany Murphy) gets pregnant at the same time. Bev's father (James Woods) talks her out of giving the baby up for adoption and Bev marries the father, Ray (Steve Zahn). Ray is a complete loser who goes on to become a junkie. Bev spends her life raising the child instead of going to university to become a writer.

"It was Bev's humour, her honesty and her bravery," Barrymore explains, that prompted her to take the part. But the big push is that this is the first unsympathetic role Barrymore has ever taken on. "She was oblivious and selfish and dared to be unlikable. She kicked and screamed at having to give up her life because she was a child when she got pregnant." The role is not as harsh as Barrymore makes it out to be, maybe because she hasn't got the inner venom to make a character really miserable.

"I have never been so scared, wondering if I was going to get this part," she continued. "I think I am a loser dork. I have no objectivity and I can't see anything good that I do. Maybe one day I'll be able to because it's not fun to not be able to let the pride in."

And who better to help her through this awkward phase than Canadian madman-turned-MTV spokeslunatic, Tom Green, her husband as of April. Together they prove the slightly demented romantic theory of star-crossed lovers. Together, they taunt the press. Given the gravitas of celebrity journalism, it's about time someone started practising disinformation as a sport. And given how relaxed they are with the press, it's that much better that Barrymore should put seriousness into her acting.

Scary Session

How many times do we have to tell you? Don't go in the abandoned insane asylum!

by Rachel SANDERS

Review

Session 9
opens Friday, Oct. 19
at the Garneau Theatre
★★★ (out of five)

If there's one hard-and-fast rule in life, it's this: never, ever agree to do construction work in an abandoned lunatic asylum. Before you know it, someone's going to go whacko and start chopping people up. You don't want to go getting yourself into that kind of trouble.

Too bad the chumps in Session 9 weren't aware of this obvious principle. At the beginning of the film, the five construction workers are hired to extract all of the asbestos from a long-disused nuthouse in preparation for its restoration and transformation into the town archive. In order to secure the contract, the head of the company, Gordon Fleming (Peter Mullan), promises they'll finish the job at a near-impossible speed. The characters' personal problems, however, impede their ability to get down to business Gord is all stressed out due to the pressures of having a new baby. Tension between two of the other characters, Hank (Joshua Lucas) and Phil (David Caruso), stems from the fact that Hank has stolen Phil's girlfriend. Gord's nephew Jeff is a mutton-head with a mullet who is afraid of the dark. And Mike, a law school drop-out, becomes obsessed with a series of tapes he finds in the basement which contain interviews with a mysterious multiple-personality patient. As the boys start pulling down ceiling tiles and ripping apart walls, they start acting a little strangely, affected by the building's demented vibe. After one of the characters disappears, things build steadily towards a skin-crawling climax of the screaming heebie jeebies.

Session 9 contains plenty of scenes of the usual horror film "don't go down there!" variety especially when the four remaining characters split up and end up wandering all over the asylum alone. Highly effective horror flick techniques include spooky-ass music and shaky digital cinematography that'll get you peeking over the back of your theatre seat to make sure there isn't a knife-wielding psycho lurking back there chowing down on some popcorn before he slices your face off. The wet-your-pants tension is particularly interesting because much of the film takes place in broad daylight. Although there are a few pitch-black tunnels for running around in, a lot of the scary bits happen in bright and airy rooms full of sunlight, the message being: dude, you're not safe anywhere. A whole panoply of occasionally pointless red herrings makes it impossible to guess which of the characters is the nutbar and successfully keeps the audience guessing right up until the end.

The film, however, is not without its weaknesses. Strangely, for a bunch of guys with an impossible deadline, the characters have an overabundance of time for yakking, listening to old tapes and prowling around the creepy building. And despite the effective use of horror film methods, there's a big problem with the pay-off. By the last five minutes it's as though the director, after spending two hours blowing up a big scary balloon, just lets it go whizzing all over the room — not so much scary as it is funny. The boogie man isn't nearly as disturbing as he might have been, which is either good or bad news, depending on your appreciation of the horror film genre. At least you won't have any trouble sleeping afterwards

Hey, did you hear a noise? BOO! Ha ha, gotcha. Sucker.

Vive la VIFF!

Lotusland film fest weird and wonderful

by Jason ANDERSON

You might think that the political uncertainties of the world right now would make movie-watching a low priority for most people, but such was not the case in Vancouver. Whereas the Sept. 11 attacks temporarily halted the Toronto film festival and caused visiting stars to hightail it out of town, the counterattacks on Afghanistan barely troubled the schedule at the Vancouver International Film Festival. The fest, celebrating its 20th year, even broke attendance records during its run from Sept. 27 to Oct. 12.

This wasn't a matter of audiences escaping into Hollywood fluff. Even something as frothy as the opening gala Amelie — a ravishing and quintessentially Parisian romantic fantasy by Delicatessen co-director Jean-Pierre Jeunet — or as deranged as the anniversary gala Mulholland Drive — David Lynch's most potent and most radical movie since Blue Velvet — provoked feelings of fear, loneliness and despair.

Among the films that attracted the most attention in light of recent events was Kandahar (The Sun Behind the Moon), a typically ambiguous new film by Iranian director Mohsen Mokhmalbaf. Ordinarily, it's the sort of work destined to be seen by a small art-house audience, but now its subject has become extremely topical. Blurring the line between fiction and documentary, Kandahar traces the journey of Nafas (played by Niloufar Pazira, an Afghani-Canadian writer and filmmaker) who enters Afghanistan clandestinely to try to reach her despondent sister in the titular city. Nafas becomes subject to the restrictions faced by Afghan women under the Taliban regime and witness to the suffering of its citizens. (Jung (War): In the Land of the Mujaheddin, a more straightforward and wrenching look at some of the same conditions, won the NFB prize for best documentary.)

Even if few other films commented on our times with quite so much directness as Kandahar, there were many more in Vancouver just as strong and distinctive. The spotlight on France included the Canadian premiere of Va Savoir, the latest by Jacques Rivette. More accessible than this year's other excellent films by elderly French New Wavers, Va Savoir is the story of an actor and her director who pursue old and new loves during a Paris production of a Pirandello play, scenes from which are skilfully integrated into Rivette's witty, elegant farce. Better yet is Laurent Cantet's Time Out, an unsettling drama about a businessman who conceals his unemployment from his family and slips into a moral abyss.

Proving that the French can make popcorn movies, too, the VIFF also had one of the country's biggest box-office hits. As the world's first attempt to combine a French costume drama, a gothic horror story and a post-Matrix action movie, Brotherhood of the Wolf is bound to get a little ungainly. Nevertheless, Christophe Gans' Eurohorror tale about a handsome libertine and his Iroquois Mohawk warrior friend investigating a mysterious beast's reign of terror in pre-revolutionary France is an amazing achievement.

A strong entry in the series devoted to new Argentinian films, Lisandro Alonso's La Libertad is a simple yet profound expl[oration] of the meaning of solitud[e]. The film depicts one day in the [life] of a woodcutter in rural Argen[tina]. Precious little happens bu[t it's] well worth your patience, [espe]cially because Alonso pa[ints] screen with so many stark [and] beautiful landscapes. A m[ore] gonzo and even grungier [view] of the world was provided b[y] Andrew Kötting's This [Is] Earth, a British adaptation [of] Emile Zola's La Terre and [John] Berger's Pig Earth that pla[ys] like a berserk riot of pus, [vomit] and muck.

It is the filmmakers of J[apan] who've cornered the ma[rket] on outrage and extremity. H[ere] movies with titles like T[he] Hooker Became Killing M[achine] Daehakno and Tokyo Tra[sh] were cakewalks next to th[e work] of Japanese sicko auteur T[akashi] Miike, who had several ne[w] movies at the VIFF. Ichi the K[iller], a faithful adaptation of Y[oshihiro] Hideo's notorious manga [which] means brave and/or stupid [in] ers are subjected to ever mor[e] landish scenes of torture a[nd] hem. And in Visitor Q, mem[bers] of a highly dysfunctional [family] indulge in S&M, physical [abuse], incest, necrophilia and, er[, addic]tion. (I left during the necro[philia] but only because I was late for [my] appointment.)

Next to all the aforementioned activity, this year's achievements in Canadian film seemed more modest. For one thing, Bruce McDonald's eagerly anticipated Picture Claire — a caper noir starring Juliette Lewis as a French-speaking Montrealer — turned out to be an utter piece of crap. That said, Vancouver director Bruce Sweeney's Last Wedding, a brilliantly acerbic comedy, and [his] place as the closing gala confirmed that the Canadian presence at the VIFF was very much a Western Canadian one. Such was the extent of local pride that even Anne Wheeler's awful Sudden Naked got a rapturous reception.

The documentary Obachan's Garden — the extraordinary story of a Japanese woman who came to B.C. in 1925 — was the favourite Western Canadian entry, beating out the much-acclaimed Inuit saga Atanarjuat (The Fast Runner) and another hot debut, Come Together by Vancouver writer-director Jeff Macpherson. The story of a passive-aggressive twenty-something with mixed feelings about his soon-to-be-married ex-girlfriend and a curious high schooler, Come Together is spontaneous and genuinely moving. It was hardly earth-shattering stuff, but then, maybe that's why it was so enjoyable.

Spazzy, not funny

Kattan vehicle not bad enough to hate

by Stephen NOTLEY

Review
Corky Romano
starring Chris Kattan
now playing
Cineplex Odeon
★★ (out of five)

In the last couple of weeks, three separate people have told me that despite appearances, A Night at the Roxbury is actually kind of funny. It seems hard to believe, since when Roxbury came out it was just another terrible Saturday Night Live skit movie from a time when SNL didn't have anybody even sort of good.

I bring all this up because of Corky Romano, Kattan's new comedy vehicle. Like A Night at the Roxbury, this looks like a tepid, ill-thought-out SNL sketch movie. But, who knows, maybe Kattan is funny enough to pull it off.

But no. It's pretty dumb. Start with the premise: Kattan is the spazzy middle son of a mafia crime family who pull him out of his job as a spazzy veterinarian and force him to pretend to be a spazzy FBI agent to steal the evidence against them. As you might guess, this leads to all kinds of spazzy hijinx, many of which are evidently performed with the intention of causing laughter in the audience.

Well, there have been worse comic premises in movies before, so sure, okay, fine. Bring on the crazy set pieces and the loopy situations Problem is, while Kattan can be funny in a half-decent role, he's not exactly a physical comedy firecracker like Jim Carrey, who can carry a whole movie like Dumb and Dumber on the strength of his crazed energy alone. Sure, Kattan can flail around and yammer on, but he's just not good enough to go to a movie for

It wouldn't be so bad if he didn't have to do it all himself, but there's not a lot of support in the rest of the film. The plot is a pretty trivial scattering of mostly unrelated foolishness, so you never really care too much about what's actually going on

That leaves the scene-to-scene laffs to hold your interest, and though some stuff promises snickers, it rarely delivers.

Corky Romano isn't so bad that it inspires, you know, the hate, but there are suddenly some good movies playing these days, movies like Iron Monkey and Everybody's Famous. It'd just be silly to see Corky Romano if you didn't have to

Pop go the movies

Mariah and NSYNC hit the big screen — someone up there hates us

by Rachel SANDERS

Review

Glitter
On the Line
now playing
Cineplex Odeon
no stars

Have you ever needed to leave a movie theatre at a full sprint, so desperate to escape that you knocked down several pre-teens in crop tops before you reached the door? No? Hey, lucky you. And if it weren't tor poor, exhausted Mariah Carey, perhaps more would be spared such a calamitous fate.

Glitter is about the glamorous world of the record industry, but it unfortunately leaves out all the interesting stuff about sordid sex, mental breakdowns and cocaine What's left, you ask? Not a whole hell of a lot, that's for sure. Apparently, Mariah Carey's eight octave voice and peachy smile charmed some hapless studio exec so thoroughly that he forgot to make sure there was actually a plot in her feature film debut. It's a terrible shame, of course, but it can't be helped: someone has to make films that appeal to vapid 12-year-olds and lonely middle aged men. She's got a great pair of lungs on her, that Mariah does.

Set quite pointlessly in 1983, Glitter explores the rich and exciting history of New York dance clubs and the freaky scenesters therein. We first encounter Billie Frank as a little girl with an unstable home life. Shot in tres artistique black and white, Billie is dragged to seedy nightclubs by her mother, a jazz singer who has an unfortunate tendency to smoke in bed. After their house burns down, Billie is taken to an orphanage.

Things start looking up, however, when, as a young woman, Billie (Carey) is discovered in a club by a well-known DJ by the name of Dice (Max Beesly sporting a distinctly non-'80s haircut). After a few demonstrations of her dog-whistle vocal range, Billie gets a record deal, re-records some vintage 1980s crap and finds herself on the effortless waterslide to stardom. Trouble lies ahead, however, as pushy record company jerks try to bully Billie into showing more booty and force her to ditch her boyfriend and producer Dice in order to team up with more talented material. Oh the humanity! Oh the disrespect! Oh the shopping! Trite tragedy strikes, trite triumphs are achieved, yep, break out the jumbo tissues with lotion.

Glitter's flimsy plot is propped up by equally limp cinematic techniques. Manic edits between club scenes and sparkling night views of Manhattan attempt to distract the viewer from the fact that there's nothing actually happening aside from a few admittedly impressive costume changes. From satin hot pants to metallic bikini to cling-film-plus-sequins evening gown, Mariah's figure is far better developed and exhibited than any of the actual characters in the film. Although Glitter is riddled with endless scenes of ass-scratchingly dull dialogue between Billie and her famous DJ boyfriend, the characters remain flat and vacuous.

Unless you're a fan of Carey's voice (and if so, you might want to get your ears irrigated), avoid this empty-headed waste of time. If you want escapism, stay home and watch reruns of Suddenly Susan.

Lance Bass in On the Line

In other pop music-related ma news, people who ca enough of boy bands on t and television should hu their local multiplex and p down their hard-earne the privilege of seeing the feature film debut of members Lance Bass and Fatone. A particularly al men of the already sm the romantic comedy, it f Bass as a shy Chicago ad who meets a beautiful gi subway, then lacks the sto ask her her name and phone ber. For 90 agonizing minutes fraught with syrupy boy-band melodies and product placem nebbish seeks girl and is subj to various humiliations. Gue how it ends.

Bass manages to quash wha er charisma might have acc him after countless nights ro the mike with NSYNC and m you believe he's the kind of g you forget five minutes after meet him. Faux male bonding jokes, conspicuous consumpti and an ending that goes stra for the gag reflex are all the m attains to entertainment-wise it does confirm one thing — 13-year-old girls this movie aimed at likely have a more erful pitching arm than its q masculine star.

NSYNC fans who have alr screamed their brains out in ration have nothing to lose, b the rest of the world is well advised to miss On the Line

Bandits Credit Billy Bob Thornton, Cate Blanchett and Bruce Willis with injecting humour and humanity into this tale of bankrobbers who become living folk legends. Blame director Barry Levinson for burdening the story with his abiding obsessions and making the damn thing too long. Interminable male-bonding scenes and gratuitous musical cues for how the audience is supposed to feel get in the way of the film's best bits, but the actors do manage a certain amount of reconnaissance. ★★★ (DA)

Curse of the Jade Scorpion Even Woody Allen fans must be growing tired of the central conceit of so many of his movies: that, even at the age 67, he's an irresistible chick magnet. So not only does Jade Scorpion ask us to excuse a script that might have made a good episode of The Flintstones, it once again offers the increasingly stooped, grey and balding Allen as its dashing leading man. Though beautifully designed and photographed, the end result is a touch sparse in the laughs department and completely unconvincing as a romance. There are touches of Woody's old magic, and people who find most film comedies too coarse will find this a refreshing change, but the parts make the whole very hard to swallow. ★★1/2 (SL)

Don't Say a Word Everyone knows how a Michael Douglas kidnapping thriller is going to turn out. The fact that this one has enough good acting and cinematography to make you overlook the predictable plot and gaping lapses of logic is an impressive accomplishment indeed. Douglas plays a psychologist who must pry a piece of info out of a troubled teen to ransom his daughter from a high-tech criminal. Despite the implausibilities, the film remains spine-crunchingly tense. As for the questions that linger in your mind after the credits, better to heed the titular advice. ★★★1/2 (RS)

Ghost World Daniel Clowes' comic book (or 'graphic novel' for those in denial) springs to gorgeous life under the hands of director Terry Zwigoff, with stand-out performances by Thora Birch and Scarlett Johansson that bring teen angst to life with a minimum of condescension, melodrama or moralizing. Two recent high school grads struggle against assimilation into the mediocrity of mainstream society. Perceptive, hilarious and beautiful to look at, Ghost World is necessary viewing for anyone who is was or has had to live with teenage girls. ★★★★ (RS)

Iron Monkey Tired of rehashed Jackie Chan and Jet Li actioners with smashing stunts but the same tired jokes and incoherent plot? Step into the parlour of Asian action master Yuen Wo Ping who, prior to bringing the high-kicking action to The Matrix and Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon directed this 1993 martial arts masterpiece, the fight choreography for which has yet to be topped. A basic Robin Hood story with a few twists, Iron Monkey is a finely detailed period piece with enough action for three generic American action flicks or eight Steven Seagal movies. It's funny, it's dramatic and it flies past your head at a million miles an hour. Just go. ★★★★★ (SL)

Joyride Director John Dahl, who has made such overlooked gems as The Last Seduction and Rounders, makes his entrée into the teens-in-peril genre in grand style. Two brothers on a cross-country trek taunt a lonely trucker, who turns out to be a little omniscient and a lot psychotic. Dahl plays the scenes for maximum tension and keeps the stupidity to a minimum and though leading man Paul William Walker is a dud, Steve Zahn practically steals the show and injects a natural sort of humour in the second banana role. Joyride ain't art, but it makes much of its meagre borrowed parts, fashioning them into a suitably fearsome road machine. ★★★ (SL)

O Shakespeare's Othello is updated in Tim Blake-Nelson's controversial adaptation, which doesn't do the original much justice. Set in a predominately white private school, O tells the story of a black basketball star with a white girlfriend who excites the jealousy of and falls victim to the scheming of a classmate. Not only is the language of the original ignored, the film mishandles the racial tensions implicit in the story. The moral seems to be that jocks are dumb, but their girlfriends are dumber. It's all right for a teen movie, but O hardly packs the universal punch Shakespeare is so often noted for. ★★ (MS)

YOU CAN'T SPELL HORROR WITHOUT 'HO' Snoop Dogg (seen here palpating Pam Grier's melon) plays a pimp who returns from the grave to avenge his own murder in Bones, in theatres Oct. 24.

The Others In an age of filmmaking dominated by digital effects, clichéd storytelling, and editing for the attention-deficient, making your Hollywood debut with an old-fashioned ghost story requires you to be either mad or brilliant. Director Alejandro Amenábar is the later. This story of a family trapped in a house on an island has a rare, haunting resonance that grips the spine and raises the hairs on the back of the neck. ★★★★★(DA)

Rat Race Does the world need a 21st century version of Cannonball Run? Does a fish need a bicycle? Rat Race is a shmozzle of celebrity cameos, half-baked characters, used jokes and more used jokes. Occasional glints of humour penetrate the gray monotony of stupidity, but do little to ultimately justify this film's existence. ★ (FG)

Rock Star As last year's Charlie's Angels was to girls, so Rock Star is to boys — the ultimate fantasy make-over movie. Mark Wahlberg plays the singer in a metal tribute band who suddenly gets called up to the big leagues. The comedic skills of Wahlberg and Jennifer Aniston, as the girlfriend who has to watch fame and fortune take their toll, go far toward counteracting the film's heavy-handed attempts at moralizing and evoking cultural context. Take your lighter — the concert footage is brilliant. ★★★★ (MS)

Rush Hour 2 You know it's lame film season when brainless popcorn such as this stands out in the crowd. Jackie Chan and Chris Tucker play a wacky odd-couple of cops, with Jackie dishing out lots of Jackie-Chan-style ass-kicking and Chris blabbering in the background. It's not good, but at least it's competent, which is more than can be said for most movies this summer. ★★★ (SN)

Serendipity Fate obscures, then unites the fortunes of a couple... John Cusack and beautiful Kate Beckinsdale) who may or may not be destined to be together. Not even Serendipity makes sense, and is precious little resembling the hopes and feelings of real flesh-and-blood people. On the other hand, not without its touching moments you could probably do with having your brain shut off for a couple hours after the month you've had, don't blame you. ★★★ (FG)

Training Day Denzel Washington turns in a riveting performance as Alonso Harris, a cop with an ego as big as his Monte Carlo who owns Narcotics on the mean streets of Ethan Hawke is the idealistic rookie who has to survive his first day on the job with the increasingly dangerous Harris. The film is admirable for giving complexity to the power relationships and lives of cop and criminal but the way the film admires its own brutality and finds a way to both denounce and approve of "street justice" undercuts its undeniably enthralling volition. ★★★1/2 (SL)

Zoolander Perhaps tired of his lukewarm reception at the box office, Ben Stiller pitches one to the lowest common denominator — the TV-watching public — and mints himself a cheap and dirty movie hit out of a five-minute skit. The title character is a dense male model manipulated by the fashion industry into assassinating the anti-sweat shop Malaysian prime minister. Stiller's starring performance is relentlessy one-note, but Owen Wilson scores some laughs as Zoolander's runway rival, Hansel. Overall, the pace is too slack, the jokes aren't funny enough and Derek Zoolander should stick to TV where he belongs. ★★ (SL)

The King & I
Price Range: ★★★
Value: ★★★
Food: ★★★★
Service: ★★★★ 1/2
Rating: ★★★ 3/4
(out of five)

Our visit to The King & I Restaurant was kinda like a lesson in aesthetic karate. I haven't had my perceptions flip-flopped against themselves in a very long time.

In a nutshell, I'd never been to this venerable Old Strathcona institution — neither the old location on the other side of the tracks nor the new 107th Street location. I don't know why, the Scooby Review Gang just never got around to visiting.

So, when Ray and I did wander into the joint the other night we were doing so with a huge weight of history and loads of accumulated comments (all super positive) we'd mentally collected over the years from friends raving about the restaurant. You know that much pre-visit talk can't help but create a potential gap 'tween reality and perception.

In this case, we were a little put off by the layout of the restaurant. While were expecting a more five-star set-up and decor — a Characters or Jack's Grill treatment — and ended up in room that was more in the school of a family/eclectic restaurant or dim sum eatery and a chunk less tony than I'd have guessed.

As for what to order, the super-helpful and attentive serving-person suggested we try the King & I "Special" — you get sharing portions of three appetizers and two entrees — which seemed like a fine way of getting a culinary tour of the menu without getting stuck with too much food.

We decide not to go too crazy and stick to more typical offerings. For appetizers we go for the Satay Krung Thep (a simple chicken satay with peanut sauce), a Thai-style Calamari (with a ginger sauce); and a Crispy Tofu (served with a spicy cucumber sauce).

The entrees we chose were the Pad Kai Karee (chicken tenderloins stir-fried with cashews, celery and Thai eggplant in a red curry sauce), the Garlic Pork (tenderloins sauteed with onions. Thai long beans, garlic and a chili sauce) and a side of coconut rice.

The food all came to the table in way good time and while a tad on the plain side (again, more dim sum service than the tony dining room I was expecting) was tasty and filling

Ray and I were more than happy with all the appetizers in particular, especially grooving to the sauces (very tangy, very bracing, very good thing we'd ordered a Shiraz to clean off the ol' taste buds between mouthfuls) and the delightful breading on the calamari. The only negative feedback was that the chicken satay was a tad dry.

We were also more than happy with the entrees, finding the pork dish to be extra-decadent and the chicken's red curry sauce to be one of the more bracing and well-balanced sauces I'd tasted in ages. Not only where the portions generous but the sauces were more than hearty and rich — again a good surprise.

Still, good portion sizes or not, I still wanted a palate cleaner and went for the Pearl Tapioca Pudding (cooked in coconut milk and served over fresh mango). No disappointment there: very cool, very refreshing, amazingly light.

Restaurant REVIEWS

ECLECTIC

Dad's Campus, 8629 112 St., 408-3914: An Edmonton institution with a broad middle-of-the-road menu usually fortified with a few elegant offerings. Busy place though, go early if you're attending an event at the Jube. Overall rating: ★★★

Four Rooms Edmonton Centre, 426-4772 – Hip yet comfortable dining room(s) serves a goodly selection of appetizers, specifically designed with the intent on of allowing patrons to experiment/share in a controlled manner. Perfect before taking in a downtown art event with friends. Scooby picks include Portobickers, Satay Skewers and the Thailan Stir-fry. Overall rating: ★★★

Dadeo Restaurant 10548A-82 Ave., 433-0303– Okay, I realize that Dadeo serves mainly the one cuisine (Cajun/ Creole/ Southern), but it's under eclectic cause it's so darn cool and one of the perpetual highlights of the Whyte scene. A visit to the '50s era railroad-style diner isn't complete without a chicken Po'Boys or a Mighty Combo Fabio (the St. Louis chicken combination plate). Overall rating: ★★★★

La Loca across from University between 112 St. and 84 Ave.: An often Scooby Review Gang favourite. Fun service, good selection of upscale Mex entrees and desserts and fair trade coffee in funky minimalist setting. Overall rating: ★★★★

Cheer's Place 10020-101A Ave., Edmonton, 422-0282: If "Cheers" were a restaurant, it would be Frank's Place. In the dictionary definition of "cheers" this joint is famous for its big steam table over which Frank and his staff reigns, offering truly monstrous portions. Overall Rating: ★★★

Four Rooms Café 10324-82 Ave., Edmonton 439-8386: Don't let the fact this Dominion Hotel has a patio deter you. Even if you have to wait for a table, it's worth it. If somehow there was music it would be the world beat and danceable. Overall Rating: ★★★

Shand's Jasper and 116 St., Edmonton, 482-2600: Restaurants rise and fall with regularity, but Normand's endures — in part because they know how to ride fickle waves of fashion (cigar nights during the height of that craze) without losing sight of the basics of good cooking and a great night out. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Upper Crust Restaurant 10909-86 Ave., Edmonton, 433-0810: Located in a fine mid-era modernist building, the Upper Crust is a huge favourite of many an area special event attender, but don't forget its stand-alone charms. The desserts alone are worth a visit. Overall Rating: ★★★

Zenari's on First 10117-101 St., Edmonton: 425-6151: It's no surprise why Zenari's is such a hot downtown destination, given its funky jazz evenings and tempting take on Italian cuisine. Two personal faves are the Crostonis (sourdough bread crust pizza-like dish) and Risottos. Overall Rating: ★★★

Urban Lounge and Whisky Grill 8111-105 St., Edmonton, 439-3388: A meat-lover's dining room, this super-hot off-Whyte bar is famous for its whisky-sauce grilled dishes including steaks, baby back ribs and jumbo beef ribs. I personally like the platters where you can nosh the broadest. Overall Rating: ★★★

Tasty Tom's on Whyte 9965-82 Ave., Edmonton, 437-5761: Tasty Tom's has got to be my favourite German restaurant. I love the funky, diner feel, and also I appreciate the deft (and contemporary) take on continental (the goulash soup and the schnitzel burger especially). Overall Rating: ★★★★

Chianti Café and Restaurant 10501—82 Ave., Edmonton, 439-9829: Not Edmonton's fanciest take on Italian cuisine, but one of everybody's favourites for the obvious reasons: always affordable, always bustling, always spot-on consistent, always oh-so-friendly in one of the city's most interesting historical buildings. Overall Rating: ★★★

Paris Market 10363-104 St., Edmonton, 424-2511: Paris Market's Café Les Muses delivers a civilized mix of classic French and regional Canuck cuisine in a casual, take-out-friendly atmosphere. The home-made New York Soda is a definite must-nosh. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Il Forno Ristorante 14981 Stony Plain Rd., Edmonton, 455-0443: If you visit this ever-popular eatery — famous for its oven-baked pizzas in its west-end, street-front strip-mall location — go early. You may wait for a table, but a well-done meal here is worth the effort. Overall Rating: ★★★★

Scona Market Booster Juice
Juice & Smoothie Bar
Smoothies
Addictive. Blended at the time of ordering, smoothies are made with fresh fruit, pure juice, home-made yogurt and non-fat sorbets. The flavours are so delicious, you'll have a hard time choosing a favorite
Boosters
Herbal and nutritional supplements which don't affect the flavor of the smoothies but will provide an added "boost" nutritionally. There are 10 different Boosters to choose from Wheatgrass
Want to get your vegetables all in one shot? Try our fresh grown on site wheatgrass. Cut and juiced for you to see, just one ounce of juice is the nutritional equivalent to 2-1/2 pounds of green, leafy vegetables

SEVEN DAYS IN THE CITY

PICK OF THE WEEK

It's two, two, two Canadian folk music faves for the price of one as Oh Susanna and Zubot and Dawson take the Arden Theatre (5 St. Anne St., St. Albert) stage on Thursday, Oct. 25. The show starts at 7:30 p.m. Call the Arden Box Office (459-1542) or Ticketmaster for tickets and info.

THURSDAY

Toronto's Pocket Dwellers come correct (as they say) with live hip hop sounds that will dazzle your ear and move your butt. Can't beat that, can ya? See them tonight at Urban Lounge (8111 - 105 St.) or Friday at Tin Pan Alley (4804 Calgary Tr. S.), but for cryin' in the night, man, see them.

FRIDAY

Stars (10551 - 82 Ave.) presents a musical lineup so heavy it would kill you if it fell on you from out of a tree as Vancouver's Punchdrunk (featuring members of the considerably heavy Strapping Lad) are joined by the cream of Edmonton's heavy music scene — ie: Butcher'd, Anchored Soul and Curbstomp. Cover is $8.

SATURDAY

Swingabilly guitar phenom J.W. Jones finishes up a week at Blues on Whyte (10329 - 82 Ave.) with his exciting young band, including blues harp wunderkind Southside Steve. Get there early to stake out your space on the dance floor.

SUNDAY

Theatre Network artistic director Bradley Moss is just the plain old director of For the Pleasure of Seeing Her Again, a new work by Michel Tremblay. But what a director he is! Catch a 2 p.m. matinee of the show at the Roxy Theatre (10708 - 124 St.). Tickets are $12.50 - $15.50. Call the Roxy Box Office at 453-2440.

MONDAY

Before there was Private Ryan, there were The Fighting Sullivans. Lloyd Bacon's 1944 drama depicts a close-knit Iowa family through the Great Depression and WWII, when the many sons go off to war. Meet them all tonight at the Provincial Museum Auditorium (102 Ave. and 128 St.) at 8 p.m., as the Edmonton Film Society continues their Salute to WWII Movies. Seats are $2 - $5.

TUESDAY

Visual artist David LaRiviere presents his latest show, Vicious Circles, which opens tonight at Latitude 53 Gallery (10137 - 104 St.)). LaRiviere depicts himself as the artist-clown, confronting the idealized truths of art. Find out more at www.latitude53.org or get your ass down there before Nov. 24 and see it for yourself. Admission is free, but donations are welcome.

WEDNESDAY

You like singer-songwriters? How about four of them all in one place — and humdingers at that? Toronto's Mia Sheard (pictured) is joined by our own Maren Ord, Scott Peters of Captain Tractor and Paul Bellows for Radio Wednesday, a songwriter's circle at the Sidetrack Café (10333 - 112 St.). Cover is $6 and the show starts at 8 p.m.

Free Stuff

Can it be that we're already halfway through October? It seems we're running out of beautiful fall days. Don't worry — we'll never run out of FREE STUFF. So belly up, y'all.

By popular demand, we've got more of those swell lithographs created by local pop music sensation and artist Maren Ord (whom you can see Oct. 24 at the Sidetrack Café). To win one of these collectible pieces of art, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us the name of the record label Ms. Ord is currently on. If you reach our answering machine, hang up and try again. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

For the more active set, we have Body Quest Fitness Centre passes up for grabs. To win, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us the exact distance of a marathon. If you reach our answering machine, hang up and try again. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

Just in time for Halloween, a new flick called Session 9, set in an abandoned insane asylum, opens this week at the Garneau Theatre. To win a double guest pass, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us which Session 9 cast member used to be on NYPD Blue. If you reach our answering machine, hang up and try again. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

Drama fans will no doubt want to see An American Rhapsody, a tale of family ties amongst Hungarian immigrants arriving in the U.S. in the 1960s, which opens this week at the Princess Theatre. To win a double guest pass, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us the name of star Nastassja Kinski's famous father. If you reach our answering machine, hang up and try again. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

If you like music from the movies more than the actual movies themselves, we have some CD copies of An American Rhapsody's lovely orchestral soundtrack up for grabs. To win, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us the name of Hungary's capital city. If you reach our answering machine, hang up and try again. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

The weird and wonderful Ghost World continues its run at the Princess Theatre and we think you really ought to see it. That's why we're giving away double guest passes to the film which stars Thora Birch. To win, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us the name of the film in which Thora Birch plays Kevin Spacey's daughter. If you reach our answering machine, hang up and try again. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

Lovers of local music won't want to miss Lure when they launch their new CD, [illegible], at the New City Likwid Lounge on Saturday, Oct. 27. To win a pair of tickets, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us what day it's. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

Finally, we have a pair of tickets to see Canadian Championship Wrestling on Sunday, Nov. 4 at Festival Place in Sherwood Park. To win, call our contest hotline at 430-9043 between 1 and 1:15 p.m. on Friday and tell us the name of the patriarch of Canada's best-known wrestling family, who founded Stampede Wrestling from his Calgary homebase. You cannot win FREE STUFF if you have won in the last 30 days.

Party favours

Forget Tupperware; have a sex toy party

It's such a clever idea. A Tupperware-style sex toy party. Where we'd turn the traditional celebration of domesticity and advanced food storage techniques into a celebration of orgasmicity and advanced masturbation techniques. Back in the '50s — a time when homosexuality wasn't discussed or accepted — some Tupperware parties were actually secret lesbian get-togethers, the perfect foil for closeted housewives who'd been forced into straight marriages to exchange more than food storage tips. No wonder they were so popular. Even today, on average, every two seconds somewhere in the world, someone's throwing a Tupperware party. There's got to be something more exciting going on here than the burpable bowls.

Still, I decided sex toys would be much more useful household appliances for my girlfriends, and invited Carlyle Jansen of Good For Her (www.goodforher.com) to host a sex toy party at my place.

Ironically, Jansen is a lesbian who had one of her first memorable sex toy party experiences at another stellar example of bizarre feminine ritual: a bridal shower. No, showers are not secretly lesbian sex parties too. She brought the toy as a gift. "It kinda stood out among the wine glasses and salad bowls," she laughs.

Of course, the gift was a hit and had all the ladies at the shower asking questions. It was the beginning of a career. Jansen opened her Toronto-based chick-friendly sex store several years ago as "a place where women could run in, ask where their G-spot is, and leave."

But the 10 women gathered at my place weren't going anywhere. Settling in with wine and, uh, finger foods, we were ready for sex toy education and fun — with the emphasis on fun.

And indeed, Jansen's first question is, "How do each of you like to play?"

She got us to shout out words we associate with play — abandon, laughter, sticky, lack of embarrassment, trucks, summer and popsicles, shouting, high energy, colour, being absorbed in the moment, curious, indulgent, not worried about being selfish.

See how important "play" is to sex? Every one of these — except for maybe, um, "trucks" — could apply to sex.

Play is also non-objective-oriented, said Jansen, as opposed to the "one orgasm for me, one for you" approach.

With this in mind, Jansen opened a box of goodies and had us separate into small groups. We took turns getting blindfolded, while the others stroked and

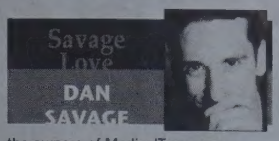
CRUISIN' THE COSMOS

Groove tubes

Catheters bring new meaning to 'penetration'



Some months back, I was involved in a serious auto accident. In the trauma unit at the hospital, a Foley catheter was inserted into my urethra to aid in waste removal as I was laid up and could not use a washroom. Every so often, when a nurse came to check on me, she'd adjust my blankets as well as the rest of the other items on my bed. During the shuffling, my catheter tube would get shifted. The shifting seemed to send spurts through my body and, to my embarrassment, I'd get raging wood. On the day I was to be discharged, the nurse came to me and informed me that she'd be removing my catheter. Just the thought of it gave me an embarrassing tent-pole. Have you ever heard of a fetish like this? Where can I go to find others who find this sort of thing stimulating? I've looked into various fetish and BDSM sites on the Internet but so far I've been stonewalled. Mind you, I'm no Internet guru and probably did miss some sites along the way. This is not the type of thing one can ask one's friends about and it would really be helpful if you could offer some information related to this perversion.

Titillating Tubing

I'm no Internet guru myself, TT, but nevertheless managed to find a virtuation of information about your particular perversion. All I did was type "catheter fetish" into a search engine (Google.com) and — ta-da! — not 10 minutes later I was on the phone with the owners of MedicalToys.com, "provider of medical toys, products and apparel for the medical fetish, nurse fetish and the medical BDSM scene."

"Doc" Sebastian and "Nurse" Laurel launched MedicalToys.com four years ago. "We have been an actively involved in the fetish community for over 20 years," says Doc Sebastian, "and wanted to make this wonderful fantasy playland, its products and knowledge more available and affordable." While medical fetishism has long and proud history in Europe and Asia, according to the Doc, there's very little awareness of the fetish in North America. So Sebastian and Laurel started MedicalToys.com to let others into domination and submission know they had alternatives to run-of-the-mill bondage/SM play. And to make money, of course.

"Catheter play and fantasies are quite common and popular in the medical fetish world," says the Doc. What makes catheterization sexy? "Most people who are attracted to the idea of catheter play get off on the control aspect of it. Once a person is catheterized they have no control of their urinary function. If the catheter tube is left open, one's bladder will completely drain until it is empty, and then it will continue to drain as additional urine is produced. When a catheter tube is clamped shut the person will not be able to urinate even if they want or need to."

Doc Sebastian recommended you check out http://groups.yahoo.com/group/medical-fetish. "It's a members club that you will have to request to join," says the Doc, "but is completely free, confidential and non-commercial. It's a great place to start to find others and get more info." There's also lots of info about catheter play at MedicalFetish.com — and the Doc asked me to stress just how important it is for anyone interested this kind of "edge play" to get info about the skills, equipment, techniques and risks involved. You can hurt yourself sticking tubes into your bladder, so proceed with caution.

I'm into bondage and I want a straitjacket The problem is that all the fetish shops only sell black leather "designer" straitjackets. What I want is one of those rough, canvas straitjackets they put the nuts-cases in. I've tried to find one on E-bay to no avail. All the ads ended up being for those stupid leather ones. So I've come to you to seek help finding an authentic straight jacket in my size (5'10", 175 lbs). Perhaps one of the contacts you know in the BDSM and/or psychological business could help me out? And any extra information about straitjackets would be nice too. How durable are they? Do they come with instructions? Who makes them? Will I be arrested if someone sees me wearing one in public?

Strapping Lad

Hm… where can a boy get his hands on an authentic, institutional straitjacket? From the good, kinky folks MedicalToys.com, of course! I realize this column is turning into an informercial for MedicalToys.com but, hey, they deserve it. I'm genuinely impressed by their website. It's professional looking, upbeat, and somehow manages to make what might seem like a deeply creepy sexual fetish look like good, clean fun. But more importantly, and what really blows me away, is how friggin' reasonable the prices are at MedicalToys.com.

An authentic, institutional, off-white canvas straight jacket is only $149.95 — which is not much more than you would pay at an actual medical supply company.

To answer your final question — is it illegal to walk around in public in a straight jacket? — I called the cops.

Sgt. Jim Muscat of the Toronto Police Department said… well, Sgt. Muscat said a lot of things. "Is it illegal? Well first of all there's no charge for walking around with one of those great big pumpkins on your head," said Sgt. Muscat. Strangely enough, I didn't ask Sgt. Muscat about pumpkin heads. I asked him about straitjackets. "Is it illegal to walk around in public wearing a straitjacket?" Yes, officer, that's the question. "I mean, a person could handcuff themselves and be wearing sexy lingerie walking down the street and pretend that he's going to a masochistic orgy."

Did they legalize pot up in Canada recently and not tell us down here in the States? Maybe so. I mean, it's entirely possible they legalized pot in Canada and it didn't make the papers down here, what with Jennifer Lopez's recent wedding crowding out all the other news.

Marion Lee, information officer for the Atlanta Police Department, managed to field your question without going off about pumpkins and masochistic orgies. "Unless you had escaped from a mental institution it would not be considered illegal to have a straitjacket on in public," said Officer Lee. "It might give an officer suspicion to think the person was mentally ill and they might investigate that. But there's nothing specifically illegal about it."

Confidential to My Many, Many Critics: There, I got through a whole column without mentioning God or the Sept. 11 attacks. Tune in next week and find out if I can get through a whole column without mentioning the fact that I didn't mention God or the Sept. 11 attacks.

bbed us from forearms to fin- with items selected from nsen's tickle trunk.

It was a great exercise in learnto play without specific goals d to realize the many sensations e can create with any object, be feather duster, a hairbrush or a nch of cable ties.

Of course, a feather duster esn't vibrate. It was time to ng on the fancy toys.

So, we wondered, battery or g-in?

nsen prefers plug-in. "They don't quit at the wrong time."

And while she knows one oman who managed to short out r plug-in with some rather vigrous ejaculation, she says as long you don't plunge them into the , they're perfectly safe.

The Hitachi Magic Wand is still own as the Cadillac of plug-ins, ough its size intimidates some men. Made by the folks behind power tools and BBQs, the stic Wand is powerful enough women who have trouble aching orgasm. It's not designed penetration, though you can attachments for that too.

Vibes come in hard plastic, jelly silicone. Hard plastic is usually cheapest, but it's, well, hard stic. Jelly, while more supple, is more porous and can get tty grotty. Jansen suggests ng condoms over jelly toys.

cone is the most expensive but able sex toy material. It's nonous and hypo-allergenic. Plus can boil the suckers to clean them.

While she doesn't necessarily go in for cocks, Jansen admits they do certain things rather efficiently. Non-physical things too. She tells us about a friend who had to renegotiate a loan. "Before she got on the phone, she put on a strap on," Jansen retells. "She got what she wanted. It puts you in a different head space."

You can test-drive her theory by strapping on one and doing him. "It makes you vulnerable to have someone inside you," she explains. "Having a guy experience that can be very revealing and intimate."

One piece of advice, however. Don't start huge.

If you want extra clit stimulation while you're penetrating him, try a dildo with balls and turn the balls upside down so they're against your clit.

The Orchid was definitely the hit of the evening, though. Jansen claims this purple G-spot vibrator is the best on the market.

All night, the girls passed around the toys, oohing and ahhing and shouting out questions.

As far as I could tell, Tupperware parties were really about women getting together to talk and share a laugh while looking at plastic. This was no different — though I still think the girls will get more use out of their Orchids than plastic storage containers.
